

It will be seen that, under the military compulsion of the immense fleet and army which the Black Republics President has sent to subjugate Charleston, the Carolina forces have been forced, in self-defence, to attempt the reduction of that fort which so long has menaced their borders...

The war thus inaugurated by the Executive representative of the irrepressible conflict, South Carolina and the Confederate States have sought, by every honorable means, to avoid. As long as Major Anderson remained in Fort Moultrie, in accordance with the understanding between the Carolina and Federal authorities...

Washington earnestly soliciting the Federal Government to restore peacefully the former state of things and place Maj. Anderson in more in Fort Moultrie. We all know how utterly fruitless was this respectful and fraternal invocation. Instead of the "bread of peace" which they asked, the Government gave them a "stone" in the Star of the West...

Even then, with this thunderbolt suspended over their heads, the Confederate Government gave Major Anderson an opportunity for a peaceful evacuation of the fort. But their call for a surrender he refused to accept. He was to be abandoned; whereas, it now appears that all the time they were energetically preparing men and munitions of war for its reinforcement...

Abolition Demands Blood. The spirit of fanaticism is always aggressive. The attainment of one demand only invites the pursuit of another. It will be satisfied with nothing but complete success, complete dominion. Its appetite is as insatiable as its spirit is truculent...

The Duplicity of Lincoln. It will be remembered that Messrs. Nason and Johnson, two patriotic representatives in Congress from the State of Virginia, were officially assured by Mr. Lincoln that he was opposed to coercive measures, that he was in favor of conciliating the South, and of suspending the collection of the revenues in the seceding States...
