APOLLO ZANTCHELLI'S WOE. PHILADELPHIA, August 16.—The striking leader of the band that tooted daily upon the ocean pier at Atlantic City, returned to Philadelphia yesterday, disappointed, deceived, and dejected. He is a native of Italy, fifty-two years old, and well preserved. When he took charge of the band at Atlantic City last spring he announced that he was returning to his native land in a month or so later a flashy, middle-aged woman, who said she was a rich English widow, engaged board at St. George's Cottage, where Apollo lived. After a few weeks' spooning Apollo asked the widow to become his wife, and she at once agreed. Zantchelli's employer influenced him to have the marriage ceremony performed in public on the pier, and on the night of July 16th, under a blaze of electric light, the widow and widower were united in the presence of several thousand people. While the ceremony was being performed, Colonel Lewis C. Downing, of the regular army, recognized his missing wife in the person of the rich English widow. Although they had not met for seventeen years, they recognized each other. She went through the ceremony tremblingly, and Colonel Downing did not interrupt the proceedings. The story, however, leaked out, and Mrs. Apollo suddenly disappeared. Apollo mourned for his missing wife, and became so moody and melancholy that he neglected his duties, and was discharged by his employer. Colonel Downing is still in Atlantic City, but his wife's whereabouts are unknown.
