

TURNING THE CRANK.

Reminiscences of an Old Pressman Who Worked for Horace Greeley.

Robert Carr is a man about 64 years of age and a native of county Cavan, Ireland, who, writes a Stow, Mass., correspondent to The Boston Globe, has been here about a dozen years, and has accumulated a snug little property. Mr. Carr would not be regarded as one who had been associated with the newspaper craft. He has never been a journalist; still he can proudly claim the distinction of having, in a modest way, been connected with journalism when it was in a primitive condition. Mr. Carr tells with pardonable pride of his experience in turning the crank on the old hand press which resulted in running off the first copy of The New York Tribune, and how its founder, Horace Greeley, stood by its side off the first two papers, that being the number struck off before a halt was made in the proceedings.

When questioned in relation to his connection with that paper and his experience in the mechanical department, he said: "Well, I don't know as I can tell you much, sir, that you care about, 'cause I was only a boy and didn't have anything to do with getting up the paper and don't remember much about how it was got out, although I remember my work was rather hard for a lad. You see, I came from Ireland and went to work first for a contractor named James Foster, who owned a sand bank where Nineteenth street is now. My work was to collect the pay for a load of sand, or take a check when any one would come for a load. After working some time I took sick and was poorly off for health. Then I went to live with a friend of mine named Steve Lynch, who runs a boarding-house on Gold street. Among the boarders there were a number of printer boys, and I remember they used to be talking about a new paper that was going to be started, and they would wonder if it would run, and how long it would run, and the like of that. There was a chap boarded there named Clark, I think, who was one of the paper hands, and if I remember right he was one of what they called associate editors. He asked me if I didn't want a job in the printing office. I told him I did. He said it would be hard work for a boy, but didn't say what the work was. Well, I went down to go to work, and I tell you things did look wonderful to me, for it was something new to me, you see, the men handling the little leads, the printing-press, and the hurrying around was strange. What did it do? Why, they put me on to run the press with a chap named Fitzpatrick. It took two of us to turn the crank to run that old-fashioned hand press, and it was tough work for me, I can tell you. They were all bustlin' around lively and when the forms was on we took hold and turned.

"Horace Greeley, who was the starter of the paper—well, he was all round everywhere; he stood at the press and took off the first two copies. The first one ran off as all right, but the second was all blurred up, and we had to stop and fix something before more paper could be run. "Did you ever have occasion to talk much with Mr. Greeley?" he was asked. "No, not much. I don't remember anything in particular that I ever heard him say to any one, but I know just how he looked. He wore a drab coat that came down to his knees, and he always had on his head, when he was his headgear, a medium-sized snuff-colored hat. He was well liked by the boys, and sometimes would joke and have lots of fun with 'em; then at other times you couldn't get anything out of him. He was most always on the foot, and was around lively as a fly, looking at this, pecking at that, and havin' an eye out for everything.

"The boys used to cut a piece of paper, make it into a ball, and fire it at one another. I have seen Horace more than once make a paper ball and then on the sly pelt it at some one. The first time I worked on the press we worked four hours and then quit. News used to come in any and all ways, some times there wouldn't be but little of it, and then it would come in all of a heap. We never knew how long we had got to work, or when, but was always ready to go to work at any time. Sometimes a lot of news would get around unexpected like, and all hands would be called up, and get-off the paper as quick as we could. I remember there was an order came from Cincinnati for 160 copies. All hands thought it was a great prize, and there was lots of excitement over it. Cincinnati we thought then was almost out of the world, the means of communication were so poor, you know, compared with what they are these days. I remember one chap said, when the order came in and the papers were sent off soon after: 'I tell yer what it is boys, this paper is goin' to be an enterprisin' one yet, and sure he was right about it.

"One day as I stood by the press a man rushed in, and going close up to one of the writers on The Tribune, drew out a long knife and made a jab at him. I kinder thought there was something up the way he came in, and the savage look he had, and when he hauled out the knife I grabbed him and tossed him to the floor, then all hands gathered around and we had him. It was all something about a woman that had been written about in the paper. I don't know what these boots be. All the work back part of year, we run all that time were talking power."

The There are the stat paper on Esq. Dr. Leonard late pastor, h this line: "I vious: "I vious: "I always thus!

Washington annals, and her sister, Miss Lucy, scarcely less so. Mrs. Davis, who was Miss Sally Frelinghuysen, is usually called "the beauty" of the family, though each of the three has her champions who yield the palm in that regard to neither of the others. Miss Frelinghuysen, with fair, brown hair, and madonna-like features, is very much like her handsome father, though her expression is more self-forgetful than his. Miss Lucy is dark-haired and otherwise the image of her high-bred mother, while Mrs. Davis, a radiant brunette, combines the family looks of both sides with some original graces and charms of her own. The affection between them all is beyond the ordinary. Each inherits a competence independently of either parent. They have borne, not without some sorrow and misrepresentation, a high and responsible part in the fore-ground of an administration that has now become historic; and I think of them now, in the shadow of their great calamity, bending over both parents, Miss Lily leaning on her crutches from a sprain to her knee joint at the Garfield hospital last May, of which she was an energetic and efficient patroness, with sympathy too deep for words. The secretary looked wan and ashen for weeks before he left Washington, but he was courteous and efficient to the last. The morning he took leave of his office he presented each of the colored messengers on his floor with a $10 bank-note. He remained more than a week at his Washington home to be the host of ex-president Arthur till his condition became alarming to himself. For weeks, through a complication of disorders, he had been unable to eat solid food, and had subsisted mainly on milk-punches. He had presided at two closing dinners at his table to the diplomatic corps when his stomach recoiled from the very sight of food, and the last time he sat down to dinner here, the president and one or two family friends being guests, he remained till the soup was finished, then rose with his face a gray, unnatural tint and furrowed with mortification, and begged with his own stately courtesy to be excused, saying, in order not to alarm them, that he would try and return before dessert. The next day he took his wife and eldest daughter suddenly home to Newark, leaving Miss Lucy and her aunt, Mrs. Griswold, to preside as hostesses to Gen. Arthur during his necessary stay some ten days longer. A friendship of years had existed between Gen. Arthur and the Frelinghuysen family, and when destiny laid on him the yoke of the presidency and he begged the ex-senator to become his premier, he had accepted the responsibility with a whole-heartedness in the public service that spared neither time, their means, nor precious bodily strength, to uphold strongly the administration of his friend. The foreign representatives here almost idolize the memory of this generous, courteous secretary and his family.—Washington Cor. Albany Journal.

Celluloid Versus Linen. "Celluloid cuffs and collars are worn more generally now than ever before," said a wholesale and retail dealer on Broadway to a reporter. "How do you account for that fact?" "It is simply a question of economy. Washing now is high. It costs almost as much to launder a pair of linen cuffs and collars as it does to buy them. The celluloid articles can be cleaned perfectly at no cost within two minutes. When celluloid cuffs were first made they were too thick and rattled too audibly when they came in contact with any hard substance. This was quite objectionable. But now those manufactured are so thin and pliable and so much like linen that few people could detect their quality unless they felt them."

"Do you sell them principally in New York?" "A great celluloid trade is done in the west. The washerwomen out there must be either hard or hard to get, so the men wear celluloid cuffs and collars and save time, trouble and annoyance. You would be surprised if I told you some of the high-toned men about town who wear them. They don't disguise the fact, and swear they have gone back on linen collars and cuffs forever. Celluloid goods always appear laundered, and never melt down in hot weather. The big celluloid cuff and collar trade begins in the summer months. Youths going to Coney Island with their sweethearts want them and old men too. They are becoming so popular that I predict that within ten years they will altogether supersede linen for collars and cuffs."—New York Mail and Express.

Sanitary Item. Hostetter McGinnis, of Austin, has no regard for the feeling of his fellow man, but Gilhooly got even with him. They were talking about consumption. "I used to be consumptive myself, but I was completely cured," said Hostetter McGinnis. "How did you manage it?" asked Gilhooly. "O, it's easy enough. For six months, upon the recommendation of my doctor, I slept in a stable, where they keep mules. Just think of being compelled to sleep six months, among the lower animals."

"Yes, the quietness of family life and the association of friends and near relatives, has a beneficial influence on me with men of your temper. I raising, for instance," poly.—Texas Siftings.

A Daily Defalcation. The Hon. John Kelly, the head and front of Tammany Hall, a man of strict integrity, an indefatigable worker, early at his office, late to leave, so burdened with business that regular meals were seldom known by him, with mind in constant tension and energies steadily trained, finally broke down!

The wonder is that he did not sooner go away. An honest man in all his physical resources, he was ever drawing upon this bank without ever depositing a collateral. The account overdrawn, the bank suspends the medical receivers. "It is not work that kills men. It is irregularity of habits and mental worry. No man in good health frets at his work. By and bye when the bank of vigor suspends, these men will wonder how it all happened, and they will keep wondering until their dying day unless, perchance, some candid physician or interested friend will point out to them how by irregularity, by excessive mental effort, by constant worry and fret, by plunging in deeper than they had a right to go, they have produced that loss of nervous energy which almost invariably expresses itself in a deranged condition of the kidneys and liver, for it is a well-known fact that the poison which the kidneys and liver should remove from the blood, if left therein, soon knocks the life out of the strongest and most vigorous man or woman. Daily building up these vital organs by so wonderful and highly reputed a specific as Warner's safe cure is the only guarantee that their strength will be equal to the labors daily put upon them."

Mr. Kelly has nervous dyspepsia we learn, indicating, as we have said, a break-down of nerve force. His case should be a warning to others who pursue a like course, will certainly reach a like result.—The Sunday Herald.

Lightning burned a house and killed Miss Clement at Fergus Falls.

A Falsehood Nailed. An irresponsible penny-a-liner recently set going in a New York Daily newspaper a malicious statement that the prizes of the Louisiana State Lottery Company are paid to persons in its employ, and not honestly drawn and paid.

This has been copied here and there in various newspapers, and the company and readers not aware of the facts are likely to be affected by them. An Ohio correspondent clips it from a local weekly and writes the Company on the 6th inst., to ask if there is any truth in it. The company, however, and Early, who have the entire charge of this department, draw, answer not only this correspondent but all whose faith in the Company has been disturbed by this and similar eulogistic paragraphs. Read the exact language of General Beauregard and Early in the following statement, to which their names are signed:

The charges, insinuations, and innuendoes contained in said publication are false in every respect, so far as they affect the lottery, or the integrity of the acts of the Louisiana State Lottery Company. When the undersigned had charge only of the semi-annual drawings they counted the tubes containing the numbers previous to each of those drawings to be certain that all were put in the wheel. Since they have had charge of the monthly drawings also, the wheel has been under their exclusive control, and after each drawing they have restored all the drawn numbers to the wheel, locked it, and sealed it in such a manner as to render it impossible for the numbers to be reached or interfered with without their knowledge. It has been without any certain that all the numbers were in the wheel at each drawing, and they alone are responsible for the integrity of the drawings.

The intimation that persons have been paid to allow their names to be published as the winners of prizes in this Lottery is also false and without the slightest foundation in fact. Millions of dollars have been paid out by the Company in prizes through the banks and express agencies, as can be ascertained from the bank officers in New Orleans, and the Express Agencies in New York, Washington City, and in this city, as well as from the winners of the prizes whose names have been given to the public.

High Priced Butter. Drivmen often wonder how their more favored competitors get such high prices for their butter the year round. It is by always having a uniform gilt edged article. To put the "gilt edge" on, when the pastures do not do it, they use Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color. Every butter maker can do the same. I contracted a fearful case of blood poison in 1883. I was treated by some of the best physicians in Atlanta. They used the old remedies of Mercury and Potash, which brought on rheumatism and impaired my digestive organs. Every joint in me was swollen and full of pain. When I was given up to die, my physician thought that it would be a good time to test the virtues of SERRA'S BLOOD PURIFIER. I commenced taking SERRA'S BLOOD PURIFIER, and in two weeks under the ordinary treatment. He recommended to give me the medicine strictly according to directions, which I continued for several months. I took no other food, and continued to improve from the very first. Even the rheumatism left me, my appetite became normal, and the ulcers, which the doctor said were the mark of a fatal disease, healed, and I was able to get up on October 18th. I wish to thank my physician, and I am sure that I never was before, and weigh more. S. S. S. has saved me from an early grave.
