RECORD NOW 19 TO 2 ON DRUNKS

Arrests for drunkenness to January 5, 1918, nineteen. Arrests for drunkenness to January 5, 1919, two. Louis Axelsson and Sandy Nicholson did not, prior to December 31, lay in a supply of liquor with which to taper off a period of excess and last night, four days first being denied the stimulant to which they were allegedly accustomed, they were taken up and listed at the police station as having "jim jams," which is an inelegant but expressive way of saying they were suffering from mild attacks of delirium tremens. But, technically, they were arrested for drunkenness and the record set during the first three days of 1919 was spoiled by the necessity for their detention, for until they were taken to the station last night, there had not been an arrest during the present year for causes in which booze was a factor. They will be in police court Monday morning.

William Quillington, a delivery clerk, and Herman Johnson, driver of a laundry truck, were arrested last night for running their cars without lights. Both were released on their own recognizance to appear in police court Monday. A. T. McClintock and C. W. Hazen were gathered in for vagrancy. The notation: "hophead" appears after each of their names on the blotter.

Liquor in Roundup Saloons Auctioned

Special to The Daily Tribune. Roundup, Jan. 4.—The closing of the saloons of Musselshell county was attended with little ceremony, and much less drinking than might have been expected. Fourteen saloons closed their doors. With two exceptions, all will reopen with soft drink establishments or other businesses will occupy the former drinking places. No disturbance of business conditions will result. The merchants look forward to a better era in paying bills, and increased business from money formerly diverted to the saloons. This city will miss the $2000 per year formerly derived from licenses, and it will require some profound study on the part of the local authorities to find funds for the proper operation of the municipality.

Some of the men formerly engaged in the liquor business will leave, while others will return to mining, farming and commercial occupations. No arrests have been made as every saloon man obeyed the closing orders to the letter. Most of them disposed of all their stock on hand, and in one or two an auction at a late hour Monday night removed what was left after the bar sales had made quite a hole in the available supply.

The plaintiff asserts that the defendant is in default with a payment of $2,700 and that under the terms
