PICTURES A GIFT FROM THE STUDIO

Soldiers and Sailors' Club Presented Photographs of Much Value by Heyn's.

Members of the Soldiers' and Sailors' club are happy in the possession of a couple of photographs which are both historic and ornamental to the club-rooms. One is a picture containing the face of every boy who went into the service thru the draft from Cascade county, being a composite of all the panoramic views made by Heyn's studio from time to time as the boys were called to the camps. The other is a study of camp life, showing a soldier as he read a letter from his mother while sitting in his tent. Both pictures were made by Heyn's studio and presented to the Soldiers' and Sailors' club with the compliments of the management of the studio. They will occupy prominent positions in the club room.

CITY ATTRACTS CONVENTIONISTS

Value of Great Falls as Meeting Place of Annual Bodies Generally Recognized.

Great Falls has a growing reputation as a convention city. Already during the present year there have been more conventions held here than in all of 1918, and at least three more of importance will be held within the next few months, according to an announcement made yesterday by Secretary R. S. Skinner of the commercial club. The Montana Shorthorn Breeders' association, which will hereafter be an annual event in this city, held its sale and show here last week as one of four called in Great Falls since January 1, the other three being the convention of the Montana Society of Engineers, the convention of the Insurance Federation and the Farmers' Co-operators congress.

The next convention will be that of the Norwegian Lutheran church, which will hold its conference here from July 7 to 12. The Fraternal Order of Eagles, whose annual conclave attracts perhaps as many delegates as any other organization in the state, will assemble in Great Falls July 20 and 21 and the state Editors Association will meet here September 4-6. The editors chose these dates because they immediately precede the state fair, the arrangement making it possible for many newspaper men to go on to the fair after their convention adjourns. Secretary Skinner is in communication with other fraternal organizations and lodges whose convention dates have not yet been announced and it is probable that the list of conventions already scheduled for Great Falls will be enlarged before the close of the year. For 1920, Secretary Skinner is already laying plans for securing the annual conference of school teachers from Montana, Washington, Idaho and Oregon. This organization has met for the past four years at Spokane and is usually attended by at least 1000 delegates. Another city will be chosen for their convention in 1920, it is understood, and it is intended to place Great Falls' candidacy before the meeting of the present year.

It has become generally recognized among all manner organizations, Secretary Skinner states, that new interest can be stimulated by the changing of cities at which annual conventions are held and that as suitable ground is investigated in the northwest Great Falls is attracting much favorable attention. In support of the argument that it is a wise policy to cease holding conventions always in the same city, the experience of the Montana Stockgrowers' association is cited. This organization met here in 1918, and during the next 12 months its membership was increased 104 per cent. At the last meeting the association's constitution was amended to permit of other places than Miles City being selected from year to year, and the convention sent to Billings next year.
