Innes Unable to Accommodate Crowd; Reporter Comes Back With Distorted View of City.

Airplane passenger service was established in Great Falls Sunday with a crowd clamoring for tickets. Lieutenant Innes, piloting Jack Mabee's Canadian Curtis, was over the city the greater part of the day and when the storm that had begun about 5 in the afternoon put an end to the flights, just half of those who had secured transportation had been accommodated. A lot of people who had never before contemplated taking up their abode with the birds found themselves possessed of an irresistible impulse to look at the city from the top when the opportunity offered and the result was that as evening approached the low numbers were commanding a premium. Some 15 unused tickets were on the field at 5 o'clock and men in the crowd loudly proclaimed that if anyone wanted to make a profit on his investment the opportunity was at hand. Not a ticket was offered.

More than 1,000 people were at the flying field all day, many hundreds coming and going on foot while many additional hundreds made the trip in automobiles. Every passenger was given a dip or two, but thrills for the uninitiated were confined to that and nothing more. Each flight included a run out a few miles to the west, then across the river to the main section of the city, with maneuverings over different locations. There was no suggestion of a mishap during any of the flights. The landings made by Pilot Innes were splendidly executed, the big ship coming down each time as if on skids and taking the ground with scarcely a jar.

The last passenger taken up was L. S. Thurston of The Tribune, and if his ride was the shortest given any of those who accompanied Lieutenant Innes aloft, it is equally true that he had the edge on the other novices in the matter of thrills. The ship arose against the first gusts of the wind storm and beat its way off to the west at a snail's pace, but the progress it made in other directions—several directions—was something faster than that. From the front seat the ship's eccentricities were not noticed, but the city of Great Falls had a peculiar way of tipping itself on end at times. There was one period when the Park hotel persisted in sitting over the Star hotel, and it remained there so long that one favored the notion that a ladder would be necessary the next time he wanted to cross Central avenue.

There was so little difference in time between the beginning and the end of the return trip, made before the wind, that the two seemed simultaneous. Lieutenant Innes banked the ship and swung back into the path of the gale. Then followed a short sort of blur, out of which the crowd below could be distinguished for a fleeting instant, and then the ship had turned into the wind again at the north end of the field and was descending through a cloud of dust.

The wind, if anything, had seemed to add to the pleasure of the ride, but there offered to be food for thought in the way the friend who had held Thurston's hat extended a greeting when the ship pulled up.

Rotarians Express Confidence in the Integrity of Ryan

Helena, Aug. 31.—As announced yesterday, Montana Rotary clubs, in convention here, passed unanimously a resolution expressing confidence in the integrity of John D. Ryan of Butte and praising his patriotism. This was in answer to criticism of his administration of spruce production for aircraft, while assistant secretary of war.

clubs of Montana assembled at their annual picnic at Helena, Mont., August 30, 1919, take this opportunity of expressing to John D. Ryan the assurance of the clubs that they represent and the communities from where they came, their absolute confidence in his integrity and unselfish patriotism and resentment of unfair and unwarranted criticism made in the report of the congressional sub-committee at Portland, Ore.

PICKING POCKETS EDUCATIONAL LIFE

So Says "Daddy of Dips"; Harry "Old Man" French Who Is Now 81 Years Old.

Chicago, Aug. 31.—"Tis an educational life—picking pockets. Alas! I'm something in my 70 years as a dip. Why, young feller, I've got an intimate knowledge of more famous men in America an' Europe than Woodrow Wilson got by sittin' into that poker game at Versailles."

He Puts One Over on Nebuchadnezzar

Chicago, Aug. 31.—Nebuchadnezzar had nothing on John Bogel. The Babylonian monarch, so history states, loved to gambol over the greensward, ever and anon descending to all fours and taking a sample of luscious grass between his teeth with masticatory intent.

Bogel is somewhat more practical. A policeman found him today crouched over a bed of cabbage and carrots in the Exanston community gardens. He was daintily nibbling at the growing vegetables.
