

ROAD BOND ELECTION TAKES PLACE TODAY

Will Decide Whether or Not County Is to Raise Half-Million Dollars for Highway Construction; Can Also Get Federal Aid.

Cascade county voters will today (Tuesday) march to the polls and cast their ballots in the half million dollar road bond election. Should the issue pass, it means a step forward which good road experts claim the taxpayers will never regret.

The issue is for a half million dollars. The federal government will put up an equal amount if the bond issue is passed. This means the county can shortly have a million dollars worth of new road work done, enough to give it one of the finest highway systems in the state and northwest.

Those in favor of the issue are particularly anxious that it carry because, should it fail, they say, it will be several years before it can again be brought up.

Points to California. They point to California and other states as examples of what good highways have done. The fact that the two big national parks are in such close proximity to Cascade county is another argument for good highways, as it is believed excellent motoring roads would bring many tourists through the county.

With the development of trucking facilities there will come a more convenient system of transporting freight and perishable goods short distances, and this is another advantage any county has with good roads. They eliminate traffic congestion.

Supporters of the bonding matter also explain it will give employment to hundreds of men while the highway work is in progress and that returned soldiers and sailors will find ready employment during the coming fall and winter months.

VOTING PRECINCTS. Following are the precincts and judges for today's election:

Ward 1. Precinct 1—Motor Inn: J. G. Anthony, Gilbert T. Boyd, M. H. Bevans.

HAY IS LOWER THROUGH WEST

U. S. Bureau of Markets at Spokane Reports Easing Off in Prices Asked.

The hay situation throughout the western states seems to be improving and if the market quotations continue favorable the farmers of Cascade county will soon be able to purchase local hay at a much lower price than it is now selling at.

County Agent F. E. MacSpadden Monday received the market quotation on hay, which also included the quotations of mill feeds from the bureau of markets at Spokane. The report shows a tendency at nearly all principal points in the west for a decrease in the price of hay.

The quotation is as follows: Spokane—Market shows decided weaker tendency. Seattle—Alfalfa market has been fairly steady; prices weakening. Portland—Demand light; prices falling. Jerome, Ida.—Surplus shows some increase; prices steady to lower.

Caldwell, Ida.—Market shows a tendency to weaker prices offering quite freely and ready to sell at $15 to $16 in stack. Local situation somewhat affected by report that sheepmen at recent meeting at Pocatello decided on a maximum price of $12.50 for alfalfa in stack.

Kent, Wash.—Market is weaker than it has been for some time. Paul, Ida.—Market shows weakening tendency outside market. Chicago—Receipts liberal; market is dull; demand light; prices declined $2 to $3.
