Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine.

NEW YORK GIRL IS EXPLORER'S BRIDE

Mrs. Fritz Holm.

New York, Oct. 13.—Dr. Fritz Holm, noted Danish explorer, and his bride, formerly Miss Marguerite Macdonough Green, only daughter of the late Warren Laquer Green, president of the American Bank Note company, have returned to this city from their honeymoon, spent in the Berkshires, and intend to remain here until they sail for Europe in the spring.

Dr. Holm is now devoting his time to lecturing, writing and business enterprises.

He attracted attention some years ago when he brought out from the innermost wilds of northwestern China a large replica of the famous Chinese Neolithic monument.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

How Mother Graham "Disposed of" Maj. Grantland.

I have always prided myself upon my self-control; but every iota of it was shredded from me by the increasing pain, different from anything I had ever before experienced, which tore at my side after Maj. Grantland had put me down upon my bed.

"Oh, what is it?" I gasped wildly, looking up at him in an unreasoning panic. He put out his hands and took mine in a strong grip.

"Don't be frightened," he said. "I do not think it is dangerous, but I am afraid you have fractured a rib. The physician, of course, will be able to ascertain this point definitely when he arrives. But just now there is nothing for you except to be your intrepid, natural self."

My mother-in-law, who had busied herself with putting in order the trifles scattered upon my dressing table, gave one of her characteristic snorts.

"Maj. Grantland," she said crisply, "if you have quite finished reassuring my daughter-in-law, perhaps you will be so kind as to let me attend to her. I must undress her and put her to bed. Please send the maid up as you go down stairs."

Madge protests. "Oh!" I exclaimed in a frenzy of humiliation at the insulting tone and words.

"I am so sorry. It is shameful," he said in a low tone, pressing my hands slightly and laying them down upon the bed. Then he turned to my mother-in-law, and his words were as measured and cold as the dripping of an icicle.

"Mrs. Graham must be moved as little as possible before the physician arrives. Movement is torture to her. Remove her shoes, cut her clothing wherever it is impossible to remove it without movement upon her part. Above everything keep her quiet until the physician comes."

His voice had the ring of one accustomed to command instant obedience and respectful attention. But those under his authority had been soldiers, not an irascible old woman.

She threw back her head haughtily and assumed her most crushing grande dame manner.

"You will perhaps pardon me, Maj. Grantland, if I remind you that I am the mother-in-law of Dr. Braithwaite, whose work in Paris attracted a good deal of favorable comment during the war. I was a member of his household for years, and I do not need your advice or that of any other non-medical man upon the proper procedure to follow upon the arrival of a physician."

A Puzzle. She was magnificent. I had to admit it, despite my resentment at her unjustified rudeness to Maj. Grantland. But I was startled to hear the officer laugh boyishly, for it was so odd and curious a transition from his ordinary grave moods. But evidently he was sportsman enough to recognize the point she had scored against him.

"Madam, I acknowledge with admiration your Partisan shot," he said, bowing.

ing in his awkward yet dignified manner. "I will await your pleasure as to the questions you wish to ask me downstairs. Good afternoon."

He strode to the door, closed it behind him and I heard his footsteps going down the stairs. I kept my eyes closed and waited in almost a nervous frenzy of apprehension for what Mother Graham would say. I was sure that she would make some caustic remark about the officer's carrying me upstairs, yet she had effectually thwarted my own protest. Usually I can follow her mental processes pretty accurately, but this was one of the times when she completely baffled me as to what her brain concepts might be.

My absolute astonishment may be imagined when her voice came to my ears with a softness and a gentleness that would make the traditional cooing dove hide her head in hopeless envy.

"Is the pain so bad, child? But I know it must be. I had one once, myself. Now if the jackknives of an officer had gone about his business when he got you up here, instead of palavering around, I would have had Katie up here and we would have had you as comfortable as you could be. Of course, I couldn't stop the pain, but I could have gotten all these bothersome things off."

"Drat the men, anyway. There's not one of 'em has the sense of a grasshopper. And when in creation is that ape of a girl? He certainly must have told her to come up here, unless he's gone completely out of his seven senses, as I more than half believe."

And I wondered, worriedly, if there was a deeper meaning to her running diatribe against the officer than appeared on the surface.

Next—"The way Dickie himself answered Mrs. Durke's question."
