IF BACKACHE OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat, also take glass of Salts before eating breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog, you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad. Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generation to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Adv.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

It is never my way to postpone the hour of executing any purpose. Yet I felt very much like a condemned criminal as I made my way to my mother-in-law's room after the little talk with my father with its unexpected denouncement. I knew that I had been sorely at fault, and I nerved myself for anything the dear woman's outraged dignity might offer me.

As I tapped at her door I felt my knees trembling. But when at my knock I heard the sound of a shade being hastily drawn before my mother-in-law's voice said "Come in," my trepidation lessened, but my compunction increased. For the drawing of the shade meant that my husband's mother had been weeping. Unless under the stress of a great sorrow she will not allow any one to see tears on her face, especially if they have been tears of anger, or have followed an altercation with any one. If she admits any one to her room under such circumstances she always draws the shade and sits with her face turned away from the light before she gives them entrance.

She is not nearly so formidable, however, when she is too angry for tears, and I therefore walked straight toward her when I had opened the door in answer to her "Come in," instead of hesitating in the doorway as I otherwise might have done. "Mother," I said contritely, giving her no chance to speak even if she had been so inclined. "I have come to beg your pardon humbly. I am very much ashamed of speaking in the manner I did. Of course, you know I did not mean what I said. And, as it happens, everything has turned out beautifully; there will be no need of hurting my father's feelings either. He heard Marion say that the Braithwaites were coming, and he himself proposed that he should go to the east end of the island. It seems he has wished to go along—"

Plans That Obsess. "Pity you couldn't have found that out before!" my mother-in-law snapped caustically. "But it's a good thing we know it now. As for me, 'Stick and stones may break my bones, but harsh words will never hurt me.' Sit down and make an inventory of the linen we have. I noticed the other day that our stock was low. We may have to purchase some, and if we do it will have to be laundered several times before they get here, so it would be soft enough."

I sat down thankfully, though amusement at my mother-in-law's characteristic manner of accepting an apology was mingled with dismay at the program I saw she was outlining for me, at just the time, too, when I needed all the leisure I had to get ready for my own trip.

Another thought was beating at my brain also, an association of ideas with the childish rhyme which my mother-in-law had quoted, and which more than anything else showed that she realized her own transgressions in the clash we had had but a few minutes before. It is an idiosyncrasy of hers to take refuge in some such puerile fashion from her own conscience. But to do her justice, she always makes up for her transgressions in royal fashion later on.

A Simple Solution. "Stick and stones." Where had I heard that foolish rhyme before? Of course, I had known it from childhood, but there was a later, a more dramatic association with it. And then there dashed before my mind the laughing, mocking, undeniably handsome visage of Harry Underwood. It was from his lips I had heard the words upon one of the occasions when I had been compelled to snub him.

Where was he now, this picturesque, wicked adventurer, with the unexpected streaks of gold through the baser metal of which he was composed? I am afraid the question would have obsessed my thoughts to the exclusion of everything else, so vitally interested am I in the triangle which Lillian and Harry Underwood and Robert Savarin compose, had not my mother-in-law effectually banished all other thoughts but those pertaining to housewifery by her sudden demand.

"No, never mind the inventory now. We'll settle something else first. Harriet and Edwin are coming three days before your scheduled trip begins, and, of course, we'll want their rooms before they get here so as to get them ready. Now, it seems to me, that you could put a cot in my room for those three days, and we could put another single bed in Richard's room for your father."

I am afraid my jaw dropped perceptibly in my astonishment. Never since I have known her, no matter what the emergency, has she taken any other attitude than the one that neither her son's rest nor her own could be disturbed by having the arrangement of their rooms changed. I recognized it as another evidence of her hidden contrition which she was too proud to own openly, and was glad to propose another solution.

"That won't be necessary, mother," I said sweetly. "You know that Mrs. Durkee has more rooms than she can possibly use, and she has offered them to me several times. I can take over our own linen, so she will have no trouble whatever about the care of the rooms, and I know she will be delighted to have father and me stay there until we are ready to go away."

"Well! I suppose that will have to do," grumbled my mother-in-law, exactly as if I were personally to blame for this expected visit of my "in-laws." And so it was arranged.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restore Its Natural Color and Lustre at Once.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients a large bottle, at little cost, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of fuss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.—Adv.
