TWO "COOL DAY" SUMMER FROCKS

Some Smart Street Costumes Favor Long Coats—Skirts Short

By ANNETTE BRADSHAW.

Even when the woods are gray with flowers and we don our pretty summer frocks we must be prepared for changes of temperature. As these come with but little warning, it is always advisable to have at least one pretty wool dress ready for the cool days of summertime.

Marked favor is always shown to the tailored model of navy blue cloth, for it is a practical, and, as a rule, a becoming color. The tendency toward coat effects is seen in the dress at the right. This is fashioned from a navy blue tricot with long revers of natural colored pongee trimmed with ball buttons. The full length sleeves are cuffed in matching mode, while a narrow belt of patent leather is threaded beneath the revers and buckled in the front.

The sailor hat of tan straw is faced with blue and is banded with black patent leather.

The other model is made of navy blue silk serge, but in deference to the desires of youth and fashion it has short sleeves. The turn back cuffs and flat collar of rose silk have an added decoration of blue buttons.

The large hat has a flower crown of rose-colored poppies, and the under brim is faced with rose-colored georgette.

Diary of a Fashion Model

By GRACE THORNLIFFE

SHE CHATS ABOUT A BLUE VEILED DRESS.

The fashion of veiling figured taffeta or foulard with net is strikingly new. We have been accustomed to seeing such silk gowns veiled in georgette crepe or chiffon, but the net veiling is new and much more effective because being more transparent than georgette crepe the design of the silk beneath is much more obvious.

Dark blue, sand, rose, raspberry and brown are the shades of net most used on these new veiled frocks. Sand and blue, white and blue, and white and black are favored combinations.

There are many attractive figured silks, but taffeta and foulard present the best examples, because of their soft weave and also because the manufacturers devote any number of designs to these two silks.

Madame has made up several veiled frocks, and they have been accepted with enthusiasm.

I've sketched for you one of the prettiest models she has just completed for Miss Dorothy Deacon's summer outfit. I've selected this gown because it conveys a good idea of the simple charm of these veiled frocks.

The underdress is white taffeta figured in dark blue. The pattern is an irregular design that is very attractive. Potted silks are also smart when veiled with net.

The overdress is dark blue silk net. The kimono blouse of the figured material shows the sleeves and underarm sections on either side of a bib panel of the blue net which is picot-edged. Occasionally these edges are bound with white or dark blue silk on similar dresses. The bib is rounded in the neckline that so many women like.

The straight drop skirt of the figured taffeta is gathered a trifle around the waist. The drop skirt shows about ten inches below the draped overskirt of the net.

The blue net is draped pannier on the hips and the edges of the drapery are left open and picot finished.

If the bib panel is bound the pannier drapery may also show a line of binding. Some of these net overdresses are slashed at the side and therefore take the form of a draped panel back and front. In this case all the edges of the net are either picot finished or bound with silk.

The girle of this attractive gown is dark blue taffeta in plain ground.

Miss Deacon said when she had her last fitting that she was sometimes going to tie an orange or a cerise ribbon around her waist and let the long ends flutter in contrast to the dark blue and white tones of the frock. Madame said that she thought these colors would be very striking with dark blue, and she recommended grosgrain ribbon, either plain or feather-edged.

One of the many hats that Miss Deacon selected to take with her to Newport is a large, dark blue, Neapolitan straw trimmed with soft, blue feathers. She also bought an exquisite rose hat whose brim is completely enveloped in uncurled ostrich the same shade as the hat.

I really like the rose hat with this gown better than the blue one.

Another of her hats is dark blue faced with coral pink. There is a wreath of coral pink gardenias around the crown.

"What this new apron effect so much talked of in fashion magazines amounts to is nothing more nor less than a tunic that extends apron-wise in front, the effect being even more amusing if the two little pockets are added right in the front. A charming model is displayed with short scant underskirt and then, from a low waistline the apron tunic extends out at the hip line and is edged with black lace, which is again used to form two little pockets each topped off with a little bow of black ribbon, is tied at the front of the bodice. Yellow organdie in narrow platings is used in double frills around the neck and at the edge of the short little sleeves.

What woman does not like to go through the shops in search of dainty lingerie?

And just at this time of year when we are planning our summer wardrobes, how fortunate it is that the shops make a special feature of lingerie.

I think that the many little tailored models of nainsook are so attractive and certainly they are the most practical garments for summer wear. I find that many girls who wear silk "undies" during the summer months are planning on wearing this style of lingerie through the summer months. At least it is a saving on one's little things.

Gifts for the Sweet Girl Graduate

"Standing with reluctant feet Where the brook and river meet."

The sweet girl graduate is here again. And during the first few weeks in June in every city, town, and hamlet from the Gulf to Canada, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, she is sharing the honors of the season with the brides. She is receiving almost as beautiful gifts as her older sister who is going to be married.

The shops here in Great Falls have by no means been unkind to her, and many lavish window displays have been devoted to her. Really the things displayed as suggestions for graduation gifts are charming, and seem so expressive of a young girl. For a very nice gift from father and mother or grandfather and grandmother, a string of pearls would be a lovely gift. Have you noticed the wonderful display of pearl necklaces in almost every jeweler's window in the city? Surely nothing could be nicer for a commencement gift. The pearls seem so expressive of all that we idealize the girl graduate as being. There are long strings and short; strings of large pearls or small pearls as one may desire.

Any of the girls would be delighted to possess one of the smart wristlets which are coming into style again. There are green ones that coil three times around the wrist in a serpentine manner, and there are black shiny ones that coil twice around the wrist, and there are dainty little silver ones—some of them jeweled.

Another pretty gift would be a set of rhinestone buttons for her jacket. There are the lovely little jeweled combs and hairpins. The tiny enameled coin purses on a chain and ring seem to have been designed especially for commencement gifts. They come in all colors, and a variety of shapes.

Another most acceptable gift for a girl would be one of those lovely overnight bags, equipped with all the modern toilet furnishings, and some, even, for a nightie, a kimono, and slippers. There are also overnight bags, less expensive, that have merely the pockets for the toilet articles.

One of the swaggy stubble umbrellas in blue, brown, green or red silk with a smart leather handle that slips over the wrist is another suggestion for a graduation gift.

Then, of course, one must not forget the graduation books and memory books that all the girls are filling with little keepsakes and remembrances of this very happy season. The books are in leather bound or cloth bound, and beautifully arranged.

Speaking of leather, for small remembrances nothing could be nicer than the little tooled leather card cases and memo pad folders found in the art departments. Other pretty small novelties that make charming gifts for girls are the white enameled wooden candlesticks with square bases and dainty little floral designs painted on them. One or two for the little lady's desk or dressing table would be lovely. They again are among the gifts so especially suitable for the same file. Then there are wonderful assortments of fancy candles to be had, singly and in pairs. There are the rich polychrome candles, the medallion candles, and just all sorts of candles.

Other tiny gifts are the beautiful doxine boxes covered with hand embroidered Japanese brocade. Any girl would be proud to have one to slip into her bag. These boxes are lined with velvet for powder and the oval ones with two compartments, one for powder and the other for rouge.

Dainty little rosebuds of lace and ribbon are made up for trimmings for camisoles. A set of these in a pretty white box would make a sweet remembrance.

Then, of course, no girl can resist the delights of dainty lingerie, and there are such beautiful chemises of flesh colored crepe de chin and at really reasonable prices too.

Silk stockings have always been one of the standard gifts for girls when one didn't know what else to give. And this year there are the wonderful colorway things of lace. A pair of lace stockings would be a delight.

Then as a last resort when one is at a loss for the right gift, there are handkerchiefs. Someone has aptly said, "When in doubt, give handkerchiefs." The handkerchiefs of this season are as varied and as brilliant (if one chooses) as Joseph's coat of many colors. There are smart ones with deep colored borders. There are even lace trimmed ones, and there are always the sheer linen ones with the bit of exquisite hand embroidery on them. Handkerchiefs, singly, in pairs, in threes, in half dozens and in dozens are always a wise and safe gift.

Calico Dresses

Calico is quite fashionable. It is especially good for all usage out of large cities. Gowns of it are offered by the exclusive dressmakers at staggering prices, and it is also made at home over a good pattern for a small sum of money. It is not easy to get genuine calico, but there are several other cottons that look like it and which answer the purpose. The new importation of English prints has been received with enthusiasm.

By the way, do you know that calico was a novelty fabric, brought to England from Calicut, India, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, at the time when the whole world was searched for gorgeous fabrics and gems that would contribute to the stiff, artificial clothes worn in Europe and accentuated by the red-lined ruler of Great Britain.

The southerners feel that calico is their own special contribution to feminine apparel, and for the last century it is probably true that the southern cotton mills have provided it in greater quantities than elsewhere, for they have the secret of the designs and the wonderful coloring. It once sold for 10 and 15 cents a yard over southern counters, but now it is difficult to get at many times this price. Its feature is its brilliant coloring, and its Indian designs. Few people outside of the southern states really know what the fabric is. In New York, for instance, they call white cambric and blue cotton by the name of calico, which is as erroneous as calling cotton voile by the name of chiffon or satin by the name of charmeuse.

The French idea in economizing in linings and underwear by adding to their wardrobe two linings, which they call "maillots," has found enthusiastic followers in this country. These slips are of thin satin, one light, one dark. Gray is the color usually chosen for the latter and flesh pink or pale yellow for the former. This garment is nothing more than a corset cover and petticoat combined, cut into one piece and fastened down the back. There are short sleeves that carry shields. Such garments provide a good lining for summer gowns. There is another French idea of economy in utilizing foulard for a coat suit, without lining; the American women can accomplish that kind of frock at home. In these days when she can get machine plaiting admirably done it is easy to build a skirt with slight trouble. The jacket of foulard is like a tunic, but it opens in front, and there is a sash at the waist to hold it in place without the aid of buttons. The absence of lining is an asset in our weather. One can choose a dark foulard suit for the street and a white and black one for afternoon gaiety, which simplifies life.

What is true of foulard is equally true of voile and georgette crepe.

Neither of these fabrics demand lining. It is necessary for something to be between the frock and the corset, even though we live in a modest epoch; this too to public opinion lies in the use of the French "maillot" or the American version of it.

Fortunately for those who are maintaining a vigorous search for good, though reasonably priced, materials in shops, the factories have turned out excellent qualities of thin voile that gives one comfort on a hot day and stands for service through the summer. The woman who is aiming at strict economy can buy dark blue cotton voile which is polka dotted and enliven it with folds of white net.

Highly colored parasols decorated with birds and animals of many hues are the latest novelties received from Paris.
