Lost His Clothes In Poker Game

YALE FRESHMAN RUSHING HOME IN PAJAMAS REVEALS AMUSEMENT.

Offended By a Merry Evening's Play.—Out of Cash the Boy's Play For Their Clothing—And Had to Resort to Night Wear as Result.

New Haven, Conn., April 11.—A Yale "freshie" dashing home across York street to Pierson hall, with an electric light burning bright on a corner two rods away, a policeman standing under the light and men and women pedestrians passing to and fro from the theatre, led to an investigation by the policeman, and the discovery of the most remarkable game of poker ever played at Yale.

According to the "freshie" who told the story only on threat of arrest, half a dozen of his fellow classmates gathered in a room across the street from the dormitory. As is usual this season of the year, none of them could raise a "son" not having heard from home in a long period. A game of poker was proposed, but how to make it interesting without some cash was a question.

One freshman proposed that they play for their clothing. The idea was seized upon at once. It was decided to set a price upon each piece of clothing worn by the various youths and use them by removal as needed in the game and depositing the same in the chair of the winner. It was agreed that if one lost his clothing he must seek his abiding place in his night attire only, to be loaned by the man who occupied the room, the clothes to be returned to the owner next day.

The game grew very exciting. Some of those engaged lost so heavily that at times but one sock remained in their possession. Then luck changed and they won back portions of their attire which they donned again. It was nearly midnight when the unlucky freshman "went broke."

A freshman yell rent the smoky atmosphere of the apartment and when, only in pajamas "Freshie" was turned out into the cold night.

"For excitement it's the greatest poker game I ever sat into said he to the policeman.

It is thought the fad is likely to spread.
