Hogan's Chat On Pugilism

Malachy Hogan in the Chicago Record Herald says:

Battling Nelson seems likely to get his go with Packer McFarland. This does not except the chance that McFarland has of tying up for a big purse with some other boxer of his weight at Goldfield or some other western camp. Packer says that he is willing to meet Nelson, but it seems likely that a ten-round go at Milwaukee will be the next encounter for the stockyards boy.

Particular interest centers in such a bout as both men are local products. Nelson put Hogevisch on the map and has always held up his end in the arena. McFarland is now looming up as the strongest factor of his class. That he could have a go with Gans if he so desired is certain. But he says that he does not want to get on with the colored champion before another year.

McFarland's career has been mapped out very systematically, and his hand has contributed, in great part, to his success in the ring. No matter how good a young boxer may be, he needs experience before he faces the top-notchers of his division. Every veteran of the ring has a trick or two up his sleeve that he can put over in an emergency, and it is a wise thing for a young man to avoid meeting the generals of his calling until he has some experience of his own along this line.

For that matter, however, the rise of McFarland has been nothing short of phenomenal. It shows that all the comment about the ring not offering the opportunity for a young man that it did several years ago is without foundation. John L. Sullivan often batted in an important go for far less than the lightweights of today can demand, if they are in the top-notch division.

Nelson secured the bout, but it was largely because McFarland named him as his next opponent. When Nelson broke away from Billy Nolan he allowed himself to be influenced by some followers of the game who suggested impossible conditions in one or two of his bouts. As a result, he seems to be in disfavor with some of the Frisco promoters. Any one of the contingent is ready to put him on with McFarland, however.

Both the Sullivan twins, Mike and Jack, have loomed up as factors in their own divisions. But outside of this I do not recall a single case when any man was dangerous to the title-holder if his brother happened to have an edge in another section of the ring.

For instance, Sam and Harry Harris were both good boys, but they always had McGovern standing out as a possible opponent for them. The same was with Clarence and Harry Forbes. The second bout between Harry Forbes and McGovern was one of the fastest I have ever witnessed at that weight. But Terry was too strong at the end.

Terry's own brother, Haghey McGovern, was touted as a factor at one time, but he failed to deliver the goods. Jim Jeffries tried out his brother Jack and worked to make a good scrapper of him. The effort was of no avail, however.

The Hezenah family, down in Cincinnati did well in their various divisions. But none of them ever became really dangerous, although Gus Hezenah at one time seemed likely to give considerable trouble to the 115-pounders.

Packer McFarland's sudden break with Manager Harry Gilmore Jr., has proved one of the surprises of the week, and there are many who will not hesitate to say that the little boxer is making a mistake. He admits that he has had no complaint to make of the way he had been handled, as he has been rushed into the front rank within a single year without ever being hurried or set against a man who would give him a setback. He thinks that he can handle his own affairs, but he will frequently find that at many clubs of this country there's a man slip between the box office and the pocket.

Palladephia Jack O'Brien is about the only man I know who made a consistent showing as manager of his own affairs. Jack certainly got the money and that was what he was after.

One bout which is provoking more smiles than interest in ring circles is the bout scheduled for Monday, May 11, between Tommy Burns and Bill Squires. This go is to be held near Chelsea, England, and there is some talk of pulling it off in the open air. It is said that a plan is on foot to utilize a cricket field and to have the grand stand as the reserved seat section.

The chances of Squires are regarded as laughable over here, but it is said the Australian contingent in London thinks well enough of Bill to back him, anyway. A fair house is expected, judging from the interest shown in the go.

TRAILING TOMMY BURNS IS LI'L ARTHUR JOHNSON

Negro Pugilist on Hunt of Match in England.

LONDON, May 2.—Jack Johnson and Sam Fitzpatrick reached the country the past week and the first move of the colored boxer was to issue a challenge to Tommy Burns in which he agreed to make concessions. He said he would bet Burns that he could knock him out inside of twenty rounds.

He says that, knowing Burns will

HENRY CHADWICK, THE "FATHER OF BASEBALL," WHO DIED LAST WEEK

Henry Chadwick, "the father of baseball," who died last week in New York at the age of 83, was a journalist of over a half-century's activities. He began his newspaper vocation as a contributor to the old Long Island Star of Brooklyn, in 1850. It was six years later when Chadwick began writing baseball stories for the papers, and until within a few days of his death he continued to write authoritative articles on the national game, for which he had done so much. One of the first books on baseball ever published was Chadwick's "Baseball Player's Book of Reference," issued in 1858.

At that early date what few ball players there were in the country looked to Chadwick as the authority on all subjects concerning the game. His word was law in the early days of the game and he was the principal codifier of the rules. He kept pace with the times and was up to date on the politics and science of the game when death claimed him. Henry Chadwick was the youngest brother of the late Sir Edwin Chadwick, the eminent sanitary philosopher of England. "The father of baseball" came naturally to the profession of journalism, as his father was for many years the editor of the Western Times of Exeter. One of the deceased's latest writings was on "The Origin of Baseball." It was the theory of Chadwick that the American national game had its origin in the English game of "rounders." Other authorities differed with him and the question was left to a special commission, which decided the game had its origin in the United States and that the first scheme for playing it was devised by Abner Doubleday at Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839. Chadwick played in his first game of baseball in 1848 at Hoboken. He was beyond the age for ball playing when one game finally got started, but his interest in the welfare of the sport increased with advancing years. He was chairman of the first committee on rules in 1869 and his advice has ever since been sought by the league magnates on all questions concerning the game.

try to evade him, he will agree to let Tommy have two-thirds of any purse that is put up. Johnson and Fitzpatrick visited the National Sporting Club and the sporting headquarters of the city.

If Burns agrees to meet the big colored man the terms under which they will sign probably cannot be published here. The law prohibits contests longer than twenty rounds. Any agreement to go a longer route would result in opposition and possible interference. Burns has been holding out for a larger sum than any syndicate in this country appears to be ready to offer. The Pelican Club of Paris is expected to bid for the bout, as it is thought Burns asks much more money for any English organization to put him on.

Reports that Burns and McVey intended to "fake" in their bout for which they have signed, have put Tommy in bad odor over here. No proof has yet been advanced, but Jack Palmer, whom Burns defeated, has made a confession which indicates that there was "something doing" in their bout. Burns will ask at least $5,000 for a go with Johnson, this sum approximating $30,000 in American money. He demanded this before rejecting propositions for a bout in Nevada, U. S. A.

Johnson seems in first-class shape and says he is ready to meet any heavy-weight. Burns visited the National Sporting Club after Johnson had left, and, when told of the visit, said he was willing to meet Johnson, but repented his stipulation that he must have $30,000, win, lose or draw. He deposited $5,000 with a sporting paper as a forfeit that he would fulfill such conditions. Burns said that the question of a fight and the scene of the bout would depend on the purse.
