

OH FINE, SAYS JEFF, GAS COMES ON TODAY

REPAIR AT PLANT MADE AND FIRES STARTED UNDER THE BOILERS

Oh fine! The gas will be turned on today about noon. The break down has been repaired and everything at the plant is in ship-shape according to Manager Powell.

For a period of ten days or such a matter nice home broiled steaks have become a tender memory for Mr. Businessman and now, oh joy, the good old days are about to return.

It is improbable that a holiday will be proclaimed by Acting Mayor Newman, as yesterday was Arbor Day, but there will be many little celebrations, and "at homes" because of the return of gas.

NURSE HEROINE IS WELL KNOWN HERE

MISS COWLES WAS HEAD NURSE AT THE COPPER QUEEN HOSPITAL

Miss Annette Cowles, the heroine of the battle of Mootzuma, who figured in the story sent out from El Paso yesterday morning by the Associated Press, was head nurse at the Copper Queen hospital here four years ago and is well remembered by many friends in the city.

According to the story, Miss Cowles was a passenger on a passenger train which was captured by Mexican rebels and learning of the sad plight of the wounded insurgents in that vicinity, she led a corps of volunteer nurses to their aid, former secretary of the Interior, James R. Garfield being one of the volunteers.

Miss Cowles was so impressed with the need of professional aid to the wounded in the Mexican rebellion that she has determined to remain at El Paso and assist in caring for the wounded of both sides who are brought there.

HORACE GREELEY AVIATION MEET CENTENARY OBSERVED

Leaders in All Walks in New York Join in Doing Honor

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—The one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Horace Greeley, greatest of all American journalists, was fittingly observed today by appropriate exercises in the public schools of the state and by memorial gatherings under the auspices of various institutions of learning throughout the state. Special celebrations were held under the auspices of the City club and by Typographical Union No. 6, whose first president Horace Greeley was. Large crowds visited Greeley's old farm at Chappaqua, Westchester county, where he lived during the latter and most eventful part of his life.

Horace Greeley was born on a farm five miles from Amherst, N. H., on February, 1811. His father was poor and Horace had little opportunity to obtain more than the most primitive education. As a small boy Horace Greeley was an omnivorous reader and with the aid of an excellent memory he succeeded in acquiring not only a thorough knowledge of the English language, but a large amount of heterogeneous information, which proved of great value to him later. At the age of fifteen he entered the office of The Northern Spectator at East Poughkeepsie, N. Y., as an apprentice. He seemed to be born to the trade and soon he was the best printer in the shop. It might also be added that even at this time he was a better journalist than the editor of that paper until it died from lack of support five years later. During those years he sent the greater part of his meager wages to his father, who had removed to a farm near Erie, Pa.

After the Spectator had suspended, Greeley worked his way to his father's farm, earning as much as he could on the way by working for a few weeks at a time on different newspapers. After a few months he made his way to New York. He arrived there with but a few cents in his pocket, no other clothes except those he wore, but eager and ambitious to become a great journalist. For eighteen months he worked as compositor at poorly paid, odd jobs, then, together with another young compositor he opened a printing office. After one or two unsuccessful efforts to start a newspaper, Greeley, in 1834, undertook the publication of a weekly literary journal, called The New Yorker. Two years later the paper had 7,500 subscribers. The panic of the following year nearly caused the suspension of The New Yorker and it was on its last legs when, in 1838, Thurlow Weed made Greeley editor of the Journalist, a Whig paper established in Albany during the campaign that ended in the election of William H. Seward as governor of New York. As editor of that paper Greeley became a prominent figure in State affairs and although he was only 27 years of age, he was recognized as one of the strongest political writers of the day.

Two years later Greeley was chosen to edit the Log Cabin, the Whig campaign paper of 1840. His success increased Greeley's prestige and gave him the courage to establish a newspaper of his own. April 19, 1841 was the birthday of the New York Tribune, which under his management and direction became one of the greatest newspapers in the country and a great political power. The subsequent history of Greeley was inseparably linked to that of the New York Tribune, at the head of which he remained for thirty years, severing his connection with that journal only a few days before his death, which occurred on November 29, 1872. It would be difficult to overestimate the influence which was wielded by the pen of Horace Greeley. He had courage and he had an honest conscience and these were backed by a mastery of incisive, clear English. He was brought to the intense hostility to slavery that culminated in the birth of the republican party and the emancipation proclamation of Abraham Lincoln was, in a large measure, due to the editorial columns of the New York Tribune. Greeley never held public office but one, when he filled an unexpired term in congress for a few weeks. He was nominated for the presidency by the democrats and the liberal republicans in 1872, but was overwhelmingly defeated by Grant. The intense disappointment of his defeat, following the death of his wife in September of the same year and the tremendous exertion of the campaign caused his collapse and his sudden death from brain fever on November 29, 1872.
