Confessions of a Tourist

Half the time in traveling one is dragged at such breakneck speed from one point of interest to another that one hasn't time to button one's shirt. The other half of the time one goes nearly mad from enforced inactivity.

Our two weeks in Japan were one frenzied flash of sight-seeing, at which we worked twelve hours a day. Charles was obsessed with a grim determination to "do" all that was to be done. At the end of the third day I was perfectly willing to take for granted every other Shinto temple and cherry tree and stone lantern in Japan.

Not until the sixth day did the worm turn. I had been trying to hint tactfully for some time that 12 hours a day of steady sightseeing was no more enjoyable than 12 hours a day of steady feasting, that one needed time in between to assimilate impressions; but my subtleties fell on deaf ears.

The eighth night we passed in a Japanese sleeper, a complicated form of torture not easily described. We dragged ourselves out at 6:30 in the morning after a sleepless night of torment, and began our weary round of sightseeing. It was at 6:30 that evening that the worm, which was I, turned.

I was hungry, tired, cold, wet, bedraggled, with every nerve crying out for shelter; a hot bath, clean clothes and bed. The wind, which at all times blows bleak and dust laden in Japan, had been tugging all day at my hat and hair. When Charles said we would now visit the Sacred Island I replied:

"We will do no such thing. We will now go back to the hotel and have dinner and go to bed."
And we did.
We are now on shipboard five days out from Yokohama, with the usual contrast of nothing to do except stifle our fellow-passengers.
Some time I am going to write a realistic account of Japan to offset the

NUMEROUS SENTIMENTAL ACCOUNTS

that are in circulation. The first revelation I shall make is the fact, which the Lafondic Heam enthusiasts all ignore or overlook, that 97 per cent of the Japanese populace have colds in their heads and sniffs.

The usual sentimental gush, as you know is this: "What wonderful little people the Japanese are! You know, they don't heat their houses; the baths all the year around in the open air, and they wear the same clothes summer and winter!"
They do. And they all sniffle.

I will try to explain the Japanese idea of physical comfort. You arrive at a Japanese hotel for luncheon. The smiling proprietor and his staff greet you with a dozen bows apiece and inhaling of their breaths. You are ushered into a frigid mausoleum, which is the parlor. In half an hour luncheon will be served. In the meantime you pace up and down and wish you might discover a mirror or a washstand or a place to powder your nose.

Is anything lacking to your honorable comfort and pleasure? Ah, it shall be at once attended to! Sutting the action to the word, the proprietor ceremoniously bows himself out. Soon a damsel in kimono and wooden sandals shuffles into the room, knocks her forehead three times on the floor, draws in her breath and triumphantly places a sprig of cherry blossoms in a yellow vase!

The chief difference between home and Japan seems to be this: When our old crabapple trees and Thompson's two cherry trees bloom we remark: "How nice!" and go out and sniff at them enjoyably on Sunday afternoon and bring in a spray for the table. When two cherry trees bloom in Japan the mikado declares a national holiday, the whole nation goes on fete; the schools are dismissed, processions are held day and night; Japanese poets with billets in their hair charge up and down the land, chanting their verses, and 600 American tourists photograph the phenomenon.

We landed in Tokyo in the midst of one of these festivals on a typically bleak, raw day while gusts of chill rain and wind swept the streets. A concourse of mad poets, school children, runners, wrestlers and other supernumeraries were lugging a Shinto temple through the streets, dancing and chanting around it and inditing peans of praise. They all looked blue, and half frozen. And they all coughed or sniffled.

In the evening we saw a geisha dance. I am glad to have seen it. I am sure the first thing every woman I know who has been to Japan will say when she sees me is: "Oh, my dear, and did you see the geisha? Wasn't the dancing perfectly fascinating? The most charming thing, I believe, in Japan! But then, of course, all of Japan is charming, isn't it?"

I can reply, yes; I saw the geisha. Aside from that satisfaction I don't know why one should care to see them.

Imagine a line of shuffling belsters, with a sack around the middle of each, slitting out upon the stage on end and striking one deliberate, silly posture after another, while a side line of impassive objects, seated cross-legged on the floor, bang comb music and emit spasmodic caterwauls and you have the world-famous geisha--Chicago Daily News.

Me and Another Man.
A woman who owns a little brown nowboat, which when not in use is stowed in a sheltered Cape Ann cove, responded to a knock at her cottage door the other day to find a very diminutive boy standing on the threshold. "Please, ma'am, I need help, 'can an' another man have the lens of the brown skiff to go a-catch fishin'?"

Usurer Property Punished.
Five years in prison and a fine of 15,000 marks was the punishment inflicted in Munich on a man convicted of usury. He rented houses, and exacted up to 350 per cent a year of his victims.

Danger Sign in Horse.
The appearance of "whites" in the eye of a horse indicates a vicious nature, because a high tempered horse constantly looks about, apprehensive of danger, or desiring to do mischief. The quick motion of the eyeball in opposite directions expresses an unusual degree of nervousness, which thus becomes an evidence of the temper of the animal.

Food Kept Warm.
A fatiron stand will be found useful on the range to keep the contents of a saucepan warm without danger of burning, says the Indianapolis News. It is also useful when one desires food to simmer; there is no fear of sticking or burning on a hot stove.
