Tremendous Military Power of United States May Be Hurlled at a Moment's Notice Against Mexico

WASHINGTON, April 21.—(Special)—Should President Huerta continue in his attitude of defiance to the United States the war department is fully prepared for the following events:

Blockading of Mexican ports by the fleet.

The landing of marines in Tampico and possibly in Vera Cruz.

The dispatching of the regular troops to support the marines.

The calling of an army of from 300,000 to 500,000 volunteers, the volunteers to include the national militia.

All these events may be crowded into one day. The vast military power of the United States may be hurled against Mexico on a moment's notice. Within a few days the navy will be in position to completely seal up every port of Mexico. This blockade will go into effect as soon as the ships are in position, if Huerta in the meantime, does not salute the stars and stripes.

If intervention is necessary, the first step, after the blockade, will be the landing of marines at Tampico and possibly at Vera Cruz. With the landing of marines the regular army will be ordered into Mexico to support the marines and the president will call on congress to authorize the call for a volunteer army.

In calling for volunteers provision will be made for transforming the national guard into federal troops or volunteers. A preference will be given to the state militia in organizing the volunteer army.

The second division of the army stationed at Texas City, Texas, in command of Brigadier General Frederick Funston, popularly known as the captor of Aguinaldo, is approximately 10,000 strong.

This is within two days' sail of Tampico and three days from Vera Cruz. There are four army transports the Kilpatrick, the Meade, the Sumner, and the McClelland, waiting at Texas City to take the first brigade of the second division to Tampico.

The moment it is found necessary to land marines at any of the Mexican ports and send the troops in Texas to support them, a general order will be issued concentrating all the troops in the United States on the Mexican border. This will include the coast artillery troops as well as the cavalry, field artillery and infantry. At the same time orders will be issued to recruit the regular army up to its war strength.

While the regular army is being hurried into Mexico in the event of actual intervention, the work of enlisting and organizing the volunteer troops will be in progress. If the advice of the military authorities is accepted, no attempt will be made to send green troops into Mexico. The national guard will be recruited up to war strength and after it is transferred into federal troops, will be carefully organized and trained for field service.

This will require at least three months and in the meantime the regular army and the navy will be pushing its way rapidly to Mexico City. With the marines and coast artillery as an auxiliary force to the army, it is the plan, if found necessary, to penetrate Mexico from two or three different directions. It is understood the war plans prepared by the general staff provide for an invasion of Mexico from Texas as well as from the sea coast.

Whether the army will be sent into Mexico from the north will of course depend upon the conduct of the constitutionalists. If the constitutionalists do not join Huerta, the northern section of the country will be left undisturbed and the American army will be concentrated in the territory now under the domination of Huerta.

WOMEN WORTH WHILE

MRS. COLVILLE BARCLAY

(By Selene Armstrong Harman.)

Mrs. Colville Barclay, the girlish wife of the counsellor to the British embassy at Washington, is enjoying her first season in this country. Four years ago Mrs. Barclay, then Miss Ward, visited Washington as the guest of the present Ambassador to Italy and Mrs. Thomas Nelson Page, but that was only for a fortnight. Last November she came to America again, this time with her husband and a six months' old son, and with a view to making her home in Washington for an indefinite length of time. She has entered with zest into the social activities of the Washington season, and has made many friends among the women of the diplomatic set.

Mrs. Barclay was born in London, and attended private schools in England. As the daughter of Herbert Ward, the noted sculptor, however, she spent eight years of her childhood and early young womanhood in Paris, where her father has done his best work. There Mr. and Mrs. Ward have maintained a home which has been frequented by men and women who have attained eminence in painting, sculpture and the other arts, and which has been considered one of the most interesting in Paris. Mr. Herbert Ward, who belongs to the Legion d'honneur of France, has exhibited many groups at the Salon. Much of his work is now owned by the French government and is on exhibition in the Luxembourg.

It was at the Paris home of Mrs. Barclay's parents that her wedding took place not quite three years ago. There, too, another daughter of Mr.

and Mrs. Ward was married to a young Englishman, Eric Phipps, who is now secretary to the British embassy at Madrid.

Like most English women, Mrs. Barclay is fond of out-of-door sports. In Paris horseback riding was her favorite recreation, and she expects to resume it in Washington with the coming of spring. She also enjoys golf and tennis.

Upon coming to Washington Mr. and Mrs. Barclay took a house in the fashionable residence district of the city, near Dupont circle. In the furnishing of this residence the artistic ability which the latter has inherited from her father is evident at a glance. Rare and beautiful prints, water colors and statuary; quaint carved chests from Brittany; odd powder vessels found by Mrs. Barclay in her travels in Bulgaria, and many other things of beauty and interest—all of them placed with rare taste, go to make the home one of the most attractive at the capital.

Though she has enjoyed to the fullest all that she has seen of social life in this country, Mrs. Barclay is domestic in her tastes. She is devoted to home life and gives most of her time to the care of her little son.
