FIRST YEAR OF WAR

Austria-Hungary and Italy, constituting the Triple Alliance. From the day Austria-Hungary became involved in serious difficulties with Serbia there was little doubt Germany would support her ally in case Russia adhered to her traditional policy of defending her Slavic kinsmen in the Balkans. The entrance in the war of France followed as a natural sequence to her alliance with Russia and Great Britain joined in after Germany's invasion of Belgium.

Italy was thus the only one of the six nations concerned in the two alliances which was involved at the outset. Proclaiming her neutrality, she utilized the opportunity to seek from Austria the territory to the north of her border which she has long desired, failing to obtain full satisfaction of her demands she denounced the Triple Alliance and joined the Allies. The Triple Entente was thus converted into the Quadruple Entente, as it is sometimes called now.

Germany and Austria-Hungary were strengthened by the adhesion of Turkey to the informal alliance with Germany which had sprung up in recent years and in November Turkey entered the war. Montenegro took up arms with the Serbs and Belgium, on being invaded, joined the Allies. Japan, Great Britain's ally in the East opened war on Germany, following Berlin's refusal to surrender Tsingtau. There are thus eleven nations now at war, of which eight form what are known as the Allies.

Historians are agreed that the assassination of the Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand in Sarajevo, Bosnia, on June 28, 1914, while the immediate cause of the war, was not the determining influence. Europe had been on the edge of the precipice for a decade. Perhaps the chief underlying factor was the development of the national idea, demanding that political divisions should be made to correspond with the territory inhabited by the various peoples of Europe; that each people, with common language and customs, should have political independence and a "place in the sun." The struggle to attain this end kept Europe in political turmoil. France aspired for Alsace and Lorraine, Italy for Trent and the Trentino, populated largely by Italians; Serbia for Bosnia, Rumania for Transylvania and Bessarabia. Austria-Hungary, within whose boundary is a complexity of races with varying claims and aspirations, was particularly menaced by the growth of this idea, and it was one phase of this agitation—Serbia's desire for Bosnia—which brought on the crisis. The same motive brought in Montenegro and Italy, and influenced Russia and France to go to war.

The growth of the national idea was attended by the growth of militarism as a means of securing these desires. The greatest standing armies in history were built up, compulsory military service became widespread, and enormous navies were constructed.

Out of all, with the mutual suspicion engendered, grew the situation which kept Europe in fear of war. Armed to excess, the nations awaited the war which finally came.

THE GERMAN REVIEW

The West continue to surge to and fro and three great attempts to break through our lines in the winter, spring and summer, were repulsed with awful losses to our enemies, the German and Austro-Hungarian armies on May 1st launched a great offensive against the Russian main armies in Galicia.

In a series of battles and under constant pursuit the Russians were hunted out of 43,479 square miles of Galicia, their principal force was severed at several places and they were driven eastward and northward. The west bank of the Vistula in Poland has been cleared of Russian armies. The siege of Warsaw is about to begin and Field Marshal von Hindenburg in the northward has pressed forward against Riga and now has reached the vicinity of the city after numerous victories. The successes of the Germans have cost the Russian army millions in dead, wounded and prisoners. The Russian Empire possesses only fragments of its mighty armies and no longer can supply these adequately with arms and munitions. Their fate will be decided very shortly.

The Russian forces will be destroyed or forced to flee deep into the interior to the Eastward.

The battles in the West have cut so deeply into the French strength that now 18-year old lads must bear arms. Great Britain's original army has been destroyed and only enough substitutes can be raised to hold a 44-mile front in Belgium. The British losses, particularly those of officers, have been very heavy. The army of 3,000,000 men which Lord Kitchener promised six months ago has not yet appeared and our opponents in the West never again will be able to raise superior forces to expel the Germans from the country.

The action in the Dardanelles which has been in progress for months against the Turks shows results for the British and French only in great losses of men, ships and war supplies of all kinds. The Turkish army steadily is improving in numbers and quality. The Turkish fortifications are quite as strong as they were at the outset. The prospects of the attackers reaching Constantinople, therefore, have vanished and since none of the Balkan States are willing to enter the Anglo-French service and since the Russian army which should have participated from Odessa has been destroyed in Galicia, it is difficult to see any chances for France and Great Britain.

"Should Italy send an army to the Dardanelles, it will find a superior Turkish army ready to receive her. Italy, after conducting mobilization secretly for nine months, entered the field against Austria-Hungary at the end of May. An Italian army, 1,000,000 men strong, has been attempting for two months to sweep over the fortified Austrian passes and to cross the Isonzo River, behind which the Austro-Hungarian defensive army occupies strong positions. All the attempts of the Italians up to the present have been unsuccessful. The cost of the attackers has been hundreds of thousands in dead and wounded. Austria-Hungary grows stronger day by day and although its valiant struggle is a difficult one against Italian superiority in numbers, it will be able to bar the way to the coastland and to Trieste and Tyrol.

"Meanwhile Italy has lost her entire colony at Tripoli to the Arabs and apparently is about to declare war on Turkey.

"The Serbian army, after great losses in the winter, has undertaken no military operations, being content to guard the frontiers of its country of which there no longer is an Austro-Hungarian army.

"The other Balkan States are about to decide which side they shall take in the war. Since Russia's forces have been driven back and badly beaten and a German and Austro-Hungarian army has been arrayed near the frontier of Rumania, Bulgaria has come to an understanding with Turkey, and Greece remains the opponent of Italy, and an increase in the number of our enemies under control of the entente allied no longer is to be anticipated by Austria-Hungary.

"The Germans have every reason, therefore, at the end of the first year of the war to consider their sacrifices in blood and treasure have been rewarded. We are well prepared for a continuance of the war. Our nation still possesses determination to conquer and to make the necessary sacrifices. Our supplies of war material are assured by efficient organizations. Our finances are far from exhausted and there is no lack of provisions. Our fleet, despite of a few losses among the "cruisers, is ready to be thrown into the struggle at the proper moment and in full strength and our submarines in all the seas are the bread of our enemies. Thus their offensive has changed to defensive and the prospects of eventual victory for the Central Powers is materially improved.
