Sterno Canned Heat With Safety and Convenience the STERNO (Canned Heat) and Kitchenette May Be Used for Innumerable Occasions

Sterno (Canned Heat) is put up in seamless cans. It is non-explosive, does not leak, cannot spill when carried. Keeps in all climates. The cook of the Sterno outfit is so inconceivable that you will find it worth while to have one handy on a shelf convenient to your sleeping room, or in the medicine cabinet; and another in the kitchen, for after-hour refreshment or for excursion use. It is a can of paste that looks like cold cream and is just as safe. All you have to do is to take the lid off the can, touch a match to the paste, and you have a strong, intensely hot flame. STERNO (Canned Heat) is safer than liquid alcohol because it is solid—no bottle to break and spill its dangerous contents. Sterno (Canned Heat) is absolutely safe. It cannot explode.

Especially Convenient For Automobiling and Camping THE STERNO STOVE a complete outfit for boiling that can be used when automobiling or in any room in the house. Hot water instantly for shaving or for sterilizing purposes, making coffee, cooking cereals, heating baby's milk and innumerable other uses (capacity one pint) made of brass nickel plate—guaranteed not to rust, very compact. The can of Sterno (Canned Heat), with the Nickel Collapsible Stand fit inside the pint boiler. The handles of boiler are hinged and curved to fit closely to side—price complete, including one can of Sterno Canned Heat 75c (Extra Cans of Heat 15c) STERNO DISC STOVE of polished nickel plate, complete with can of Heat and extinguisher, useful in any room or anywhere out-of-doors, complete 75c (Extra cans of heat 15c)

STERNO COOKING OUTFIT—A practical, compact outfit with which you may boil, fry, cook a complete light meal or make coffee. This outfit consists of a large can of heat—a boiler (capacity one quart), a coffee maker, a windshield, a cover which is used as a frying pan or to form a double boiler similar to a chafin dish. Capacity one quart. In addition to the quart size we make an outfit having half capacity (1 pint), but without coffee maker; large size $2.25, extra cans of heat 50c; small size $1, extra cans of heat 35c. Flame can be instantly extinguished, when cans are burned empty replace with others—They cost very little.

KLONDIKE LOSES MUCH OF ITS PRISTINE GLORY

(Continued from Page 1) prospectors discovered them. The Yukon goldfield is confined mainly to the vicinity of Dawson City, although small quantities of gold can be found in the sand of the Yukon for hundreds of miles up the valley. Dawson City is situated on the alluvial flats where the Yukon is joined by the Klondike River, two tributaries of which are the famous Bonanza Creek and Hunker Creek. Although traces of gold were discovered in the Yukon valley in about 1869, it was 12 years later, in 1881, before it was found in the Big Salmon, and in the Lewna, Pelly and Stewart rivers. Five years afterwards coarse gold was found on the Fortymile, a tributary of the Yukon below Dawson, and in 1894 the discoveries of Bob Henderson and George Cornack, in Hunker and Bonanza creeks, drew miners into the Klondike valley from all quarters. Prodigious quantities of gold were soon found in Bonanza Creek and many miners made fortunes in a short time, but unfortunately most of the gold was spent foolishly or in debauchery. One man is said to have taken $600,000 out of a claim $6 by 300 feet, but, so the story goes, he spent it in a few years and died in poverty. The quickest fortune on record was secured by two men who cleaned up gold to the value of $65,000 in 27 hours. Stories of the prodigious "golden days" are not edifying, but point to the moral that wealth too easily and quickly won is apt to work ill. The total output in 1898 was $10,000,000, from which figures it jumped six million annually until in 1900 when the production reached $22,275,000, the highest point. From this point a steady decline began until in 1908, when it was $2,820,131, at which time hydro-auctioning and dredging began and the total output rose slowly until it was $5,981,411 in 1913. It has been estimated that only about $20,000,000 worth of gold remains to be produced, out of the original available amount of nearly $180,000,000. At the height of the boom in the winter of 1899, the population of Dawson is said to have reached 25,000; recently, however, it has dwindled down to less than two thousand people. The various processes of recovering gold in this region fell under three main heads: individuals, by washing surface gravels with shovel and pan, or by sluicing with flume and sluice box; small parties, by working drift with mechanical scrapers and sluices or drift mining in shafts and sluicing; and capitalists, by dredging with powerful mechanical plants, hydraulic stamping ore in mills. The first class includes "poor men's diggings," and the second requires more financial resources and mechanical ability, but a successful man in the first may become a member of the second class. While the first two classes require fairly rich ground, only men with exceptional ability and ample capital can reach the third class and work the low-grade placer gravels or quartz veins successfully. The author describes in detail the several methods of extracting gold from the frozen Klondike field, based upon his personal observations, and shows how man has changed the topography of this district, especially in the valleys; first the drift miners turned the gravel upside down, then the dredgers plowed it all over again and threw it into great ridges of stone with mud banks between, and finally where there were white gravels on the high ground, the hydraulic "glants" washed them down into great fan-shaped cones, sometimes reaching across the entire valley, completely burying all below, damming up gullies and producing new lakes. All of which operations have made tough problems for the future geologist. The vast territory of the Yukon district is imperfectly explored and although it is far north, the climate in summer is warm and favorable for agriculture and grazing. Exploration is now readily effected from Dawson, and Mr. Cadell hopes that fresh enterprise will reveal new resources that will lead to the permanent settlement of this remote and almost uninhabited outpost. BANDITS MURDER TWO. BROWSVILLE, Aug. 6.—Two arrests were made tonight by United States customs guards in connection with the killing by alleged Mexican bandits of Al Austin and his son, Charles, at Sebastian, a village thirty-seven miles north of Brownsville. The names of the prisoners who were taken into custody near Sebastian are not known here. They were placed in jail at San Benito and it is reported a heavy guard was placed because they feared violence. A young man named Millward, it is learned, witnessed the killing. Millward says the men rushed the two Austins while the latter was at work in a corn shelter, and put them by force into a cart. Millward then was compelled to drive them to the house, was ransacked, then back to the road, where the Austins were killed. NACAZARI OPENS. DOUGLAS, Aug. 6.—Temporary repairs to the roadbed and bridges of the Nacozari railroad, destroyed two months ago, enabled a trainload of supplies to reach Nacozari Wednesday and as a result, the mines and concentrator of the Montezuma Copper company, employing several thousand men, were reopened.
