Zoellners Never Overlook Chance For Rehearsals

It is an iron-clad rule to the members of the Zoellner Quartet, when on our never to overlook an opportunity or rehearsal which a few spare moments may afford. Thus the string of keeping their extensive repertoire up to its noted high mark of artistry, as well as continually adding new works to their list. "I never feel satisfied till we have accomplished our day's rehearsal," said Mr. Joseph Zoellner Sr., the father and founder of this wonderful organization, when discussing this phase of their labors, "but we sometimes have to work under great disadvantages and amid unique conditions to accomplish it."

Often times they practice in a drawing room of a Pullman, or a small stuffy depot when compelled to change trains and have a wait of several hours, the particular junction point of a size and type best described in the local lingo as a "broad place in the road." When the Zoellners desire to practice, no inconvenience of any description whatsoever can prevent them from carrying out their wishes. This continued striving for perfection explains their being known as "one of the great quartets of the world."

The Zoellners will appear in concert in the high school auditorium here October 14. The quartet ranks among the best musical organizations in the world, and has held that rank for many years. In bringing the quartet here at popular prices, the high school's first purpose is to enable the music-loving public of the district to enjoy the concert, believing that hundreds more will attend at popular prices than if the regular $2, $2.50 and $3.00 admission; fees, usually commanded by the Zoellners, were asked.

To reduce fire danger, 400 miles of telephone lines will be erected in Canadian timber lands.

Valuable descriptions of mountain caves, little known, are contained in the report of a nameless forest ranger which has been unearthed in the clearing of files at the forestry office at Tucson. Not only is there no name signed to the report but there is no date, so it is impossible to say when or by whom the document was written. The places mentioned are in the Chiricahua mountains.

"There is to be found on the left side of the road going down Turkey Creek, just as one enters Chiricahua flat," writes the nameless ranger, "a mound or square ridge with hollow center resembling the remains of an adobe building with a court inside. This is plainly indicative of an ancient Indian dwelling as can be seen near Casa Grande, Mexico. About one-half mile below it there is still to be seen the sign of an irrigation ditch which was still an old, old sign when my informant first came into this country thirty years ago, and from the few that had been here before him he tells me he learned that there was supposed to have been, many years ago, a class of thrifty Indians who tilled the soil to some extent in this vicinity.

Industrious Tribe "They were said to have been a class of Indians little given to emigration and who worked and stored away during certain seasons of the year a sufficient amount of provender—so far as their needs and ability to get them went—to last a long time. The exact name of that tribe legendary history hereabouts does not tell but it informs us, apparently through their own deductions, that they were very much disliked by the various camps of Apaches with whom they were not inclined to share the results of their industry. Also, as a result of that dislike there was a concentrated move made against them one dark night, during which they were completely exterminated. No remains of them have ever been found and this fact is thought to be due to their custom of burning the remains of all but their chief.

"I can gain no authentic information as to whether this custom was supposed to have applied to their quished enemy or not. However, no concerted effort has ever been made to gain any more tangible information. There are still later and fresher signs of Indian life on Chiricahua

Flat, which is passed down not as legend but as unrecorded facts. The casual observer riding along between the road and Turkey Creek will notice squares measuring from 5 to 25 feet made of four lines of rock set partly buried in the earth. These are said to be the remains of some work done by Indians up to as late as forty years ago.

Apache Stamping Ground "Because of the abundance of water and game in the Chiricahua mountains, they were the headquarters of the Apache Indians even up to as late as thirty-five or forty years ago, and there are many stirring tales to be heard from the white settlers yet living in these canyons who pioneered here.

Don Jeronimo was the chief of the last Indians in these mountains and he still claims there is a cave somewhere in the Chiricahuas in which he cached some bags of gold. He won't tell exactly where, however.

"There is a cave near Keating Canyon which was discovered but a few years ago, and in one trip of exploration through it the bones of a white man were found with a piece of pipe and an old watch beside them. The bones are still in the cave and the watch and pipe are at the Bucklewee ranch. It is supposed that a white man, in trying to keep away from the Indians years ago, found the entrance to the cave and crawled so far into it that he got lost and could not find his way out."

Cool Autumn Days Suggest New Fall Clothes Usually about this time of year we begin to think of our needs in the way of winter clothes. The attention of the well dressed man or woman is directed to our Fall showing of fabrics for custom tailored suits. The leading weavers of England, Scotland and America have contributed their woolsens in a superior selection.

Have you ever considered custom tailoring from an economy standpoint? For those who have never had their suits made by a merchant tailor, there is a surprise in store. If you once have your suit made here, you will never want to wear machine-made clothes again. The fit, comfort, style, workmanship and long wearing quality of the fabrics I show together with the moderate price I charge will convince you that custom tailoring is more economical in the long run. Come in at your earliest opportunity and let me show you what I have to offer for making men's suits at prices ranging from $45 to $65.

I also wish to call attention to the fact that I do tailoring for ladies. If you want to be properly fitted in a suit of good grade, individuality and style you are urged to call and see what I have to offer. Tony Lockner, Merchant Tailor, in rear of the bank of Lowell building, Lowell.
