THE BILL PASSES.
SPEAKER REED THE MAN FOR THE OCCASION.
The Republican Majority Triumphant Despite Democratic Filibustering.
A STEP IN THE DIRECTION OF A FREE BALLOT AND A FAIR COUNT.
STORMY SCENES IN THE HOUSE.

Shortly before nine o'clock last night the House passed the Federal Election bill by a vote of 155 yeas to 149 nays. This result was reached after a protracted session of eleven hours, eight of which had been spent in filibustering tactics by the Democrats. That the fight against the bill was futile from the start did not seem to discourage or dismay Mr. Springer and his colleagues. Every motion allowable under the rules to protract the inevitable result was made, until at last the Speaker, to clinch his victory, absolutely declined to entertain propositions to adjourn and to reconsider, because their dilatory character was plainly evident. The Democrats might have secured a temporary delay by demanding the reading of the engrossed bill before the passage, but by wise forethought the majority anticipated the demand, and during the long hours of the fight they had a force of clerks at work, so that when the reading of the bill was finally requested, the engrossing of the measure had been completed, and the only stumbling-block in the way of the passage had been removed. The pile of parchment was greeted with Republican applause when it appeared.

The session which was to bring to a close a memorable debate, was opened with 300 of the 330 members in their seats, while the galleries were crowded. The number of colored persons present was especially noticeable. The amendment offered by Mr. Tucker of Virginia, requiring the judge of the circuit court, associated with the district judge, to pass upon applications for supervisors of elections, was pending. This amendment was rejected as soon as a vote was taken upon it. Of greater moment was the amendment which Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, offered, making it the duty of circuit judges in each circuit, within one month after the passage of this act, to open a special term of the circuit court, in their respective circuits, and said judges shall appoint for each judicial district, persons of good character and standing who shall be known as United States Juror Commissioners. It shall be the duty of such commissioners, said the amendment, to organize as a board, and from time to time make from the qualified voters a list of persons who, under the laws of the United States and of the State shall be eligible for jury duty, without respect to race or color. Hereafter all panels for jurors shall be drawn by the board, in the presence of a district or circuit judge. After some debate, the amendment, which virtually replaced the section stricken out on Monday, was agreed to on a vote by tellers—146 to 143.

The vote by tellers having been taken, half a dozen Democrats arose and demanded the yeas and nays. Speaker Reed, with his face turned towards the Democrats, and standing with the gavel resting upon the desk, simply ignored the demand with the remark that it was too late, the result having been announced. Instantly the Democratic side was in a turmoil. Messrs. Crisp, Springer and other Democrats excitedly demanded the roll-call as a right. Unmoved, the Speaker stood, saying not a word and evidently waiting for the turmoil to close.

Mr. Outhwaite, raising his tall form upon his tip-toes, so that he seemed to be taller than ever, waved his arms over the Democratic side, urging his colleagues to rise and by a solid show of half the membership of the House, move the imperturbable front of the Speaker. They complied, and at the same time Mr. Mc. Kinley arose, and with his clear voice broke the spell of silence which had fallen upon the Republican side.

"I suggest," he said, that the yeas and nays be taken."

The Speaker calmly observed that the yeas and nays might be called if there was unanimous consent. No Republican objected, and a moment later the reading clerk began the monotonous call of names.

The amendment having been adopted by a vote of 151 yeas to 144 nays, thus retrieving the temporary victory of the Democrats on the previous day. Mr. Hemphill offered an amendment which proposed to substitute existing law for a change aimed at in a section of the bill. Under the latter the supervisors are given authority to order the land and naval forces of the United States to the polls at time of election, an authority which hitherto had been reposed only in the President. Mr. Hemphill pointed out the danger of placing this power in the hands of men who might be scoundrels, and who were likely to be outcasts from the States, selected for their very recklessness and brutality. Mr. Blount of Georgia also pictured the polls surrounded by United States soldiers in order that voters might be terrorized by military authority.

There was a buzz of anticipation as Mr. Allen of Mississippi took his stand in the middle of the aisle to speak. For once, however, Mr. Allen was more earnest than funny. His voice rang as he denounced the creators and defenders of a bill which cast aspersions upon his people and his State. "And yet," he added, "I dare not speak all my feelings, for my language would not be consistent with my profession, as a member of the Church."

Mr. Mc. Kinley, who had not previously participated in the debate, made a vigorous and impassioned speech. This question of a free ballot and honest count would not rest, he said, until justice was done, nor would the conscience of the American people sleep until the great constitutional right of equal suffrage and freedom of political thought become not the cold formality of constitutional enactment, but a living birthright which the poorest and humblest might enjoy, and the richest and highest could not deny.

With an allusion to the Praetorian Guards and to an ancient Roman whose name could not be distinctly heard in the gallery, Mr. Mc. Millin of Tennessee began a ringing denunciation of this particular section of the bill. "The time has come," he shouted with great emphasis, "when there cannot be in the American Republic an enslaved South and a free North." [Great applause from the Democrats.] He predicted that the Republicans might pull down the pillars of the temple of the Constitution, but they would also perish in the wreck. Neither the people nor the press favored this damnable bill. History would repeat itself as it did when the people of Boston protested in public meeting against the action of the Federal troops in dispersing the South Carolina legislature at the point of the bayonet.

When Mr. McMillin ceased it was quite evident that he had not been allowed the time given to Mr. Mc. Kinley and he called the Speaker's attention to this fact. "O," said Mr. Reed, smiling with the calm superiority of the man who knows he is right, "the gentleman from Ohio had three minutes yielded him by the gentleman from Illinois."

Mr. Breckenridge of Kentucky walked down the aisle with a scrap of paper in his hand. It was an amendment he desired to offer, but the Speaker would not listen to it on the ground that it was the turn of the other side. Consequently Mr. Breckenridge returned to his seat with the remark that he was not surprised, and Mr. Perkins orated in favor of the bill, causing some laughter by admitting that it was a Republican measure.

When he had finished speaking, Mr. Breckenridge again arose, this time evidently expecting to be recognized. He called the attention of the Speaker to his amendment. Mr. Reed, apparently blind to the conspicuous white hair and whiskers of the Kentucky member, glanced for a moment at the clock. It was 1:57. Then he looked over the Republican side and saw Mr. La Follette standing in one of the aisles. In an instant he had made up his mind.

"The Chair," he said with deliberation, "recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin."

Mr. La Follette took his cue. Mr. Breckenridge made a vain protest, and then the Wisconsin man talked against time until the three minutes had expired.

At 2 o'clock Speaker Reed announced that the hour had arrived for voting on the bill. Mr. Breckenridge's request for more time to offer amendments was peremptorily denied, and the bill and pending amendments on the table. The roll-call proceeded amid the greatest interest, but there were no surprises in store. Mr. Lehlbach of New Jersey and Mr. Coleman of Louisiana voted with the Democrats but Mr. Lodge's prediction that there would be no other defections proved to be correct. All of the Democrats absent were paired: Biggs and De Haven, O'Neill of Massachusetts with Cogswell; Phelan with E. B. Taylor; Seney with Smysers; Spinola with Baker; Stewart of Georgia with Stivers; Fitch with Clark of Wisconsin; and Wiley with Sherman. Of the Republicans who did not vote Seney and Smysers were on the floor. Browne of Virginia, Browne of Indiana, Owen of Indiana, Pickler and Wheeler of Michigan were absent without pairs. Mr. Frank of Missouri, although he had been in the hall of the House a few moments previous, did not answer to his name. Ewart and Simonds were paired against each other and the remaining Republicans were paired as above stated. Every Republican, except Lehlbach and Coleman, voted against the motion to lay on the table, while every Democrat voted for it. Mr. Pitcher's absence was explained by a telegram read by Mr. Cummings, which stated that the member was too ill to travel, much to his regret. Mr. Walker, of Missouri, who had been paired with Clark, of Wisconsin, secured the right to vote by transferring his pair to Fitch, who had been previously paired with Mr. Wheeler of Michigan. The latter's absence made this possible, but Mr. La Follette criticised on it with some severity. Mr. Walker protested that he had done nothing improper.

Just before the result was announced Mr. Springer changed his vote from yeas to no. The total of 149 yeas and 155 nays was therefore changed to 148 yeas and 156 nays. Mr. Springer thereupon began filibustering. He moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to lay on the table had been lost. Mr. Rowell moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Another long roll-call and the latter motion was adopted by a vote of 153 yeas to 148 nays. Then Mr. Hemphill's amendment was lost by a vote of 145 yeas to 156 nays. Once more Mr. Springer changed his vote and moved to reconsider. Mr. Rowell met this by a motion to lay the motion on the table. A vote of 154 yeas to 148 nays carried Mr. Rowell's point.

The next step in the filibustering tactics was again to move that the bill be laid on the table. Mr. Springer, who made this motion, read from the rules to prove that it could be entertained, as the amendment previously pending had in the meantime been voted down.

"The Chair rules the motion out of order," said the Speaker, with an impatient weariness in his voice.

"And I appeal from the decision of the Chair," said Mr. Springer hotly.

Although the Chair of course was sustained, Mr. Springer was in no mood to quit the fight. He changed his vote and moved to reconsider. But the Republicans had decided that he had reached the end of his rope. It was getting late, and the majority felt anxious to assert itself.

General Grosvenor, his gray whiskers almost of the same color as the cloudy twilight now darkening the chamber, suggested, in a still, small voice, the point of order that Mr. Springer's motion was purely dilatory.

"The Chair sustains the point of order," said the Speaker calmly.

"I appeal from the decision of the Chair," shouted Mr. Springer.

"The Chair declines to entertain the appeal." Nothing could have equalled the impassive deliberation of these words as they were uttered by the Speaker.

"For the first time," the thoroughly angry Mr. Springer now exclaimed, "in the history of the Government."

Cries of "regular order" drowned the rest of his sentence.

"I move to adjourn," yelled Mr. Springer.

"The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn," said the Speaker without a muscle of his face indicating an emotion. The House refused to adjourn by a vote of 157 yeas to 147 nays.

"The question is now on the third reading and engrossment of the bill," said the Speaker. Gradually he was tightening the rope around the minority to end their struggles.

When the third reading had been ordered by a vote of 155 yeas to 148 nays the Democrats made one more effort to avert the certain result. Mr. Hemphill moved to recommit the bill to the committee. For a moment there was a doubt whether this motion could be made after the third reading had been ordered, but the Speaker directed that the roll be called. The result, 149 yeas to 156 nays, was foregone conclusion. Mr. Springer, who had changed his vote, moved to reconsider. Mr. Rowell offered with a motion to lay the motion on the table. It was like a wheel that, turning round and round, brings the same spokes to the top with each revolution. The Speaker allowed the latter motion to be voted upon, and it was carried—156 yeas to 146 nays. While the vote was being taken Journal Clerk Harry Smith brought in an immense pile of large sheets of paper. It was the Federal election law, all engrossed. The time for the Democrats was drawing terrible close.

"I move the House adjourn," said Mr. Outhwaite.

"I make the point of order that the motion is a dilatory one," said Mr. McKinley, quietly.

"The Chair sustains the point of order," said the Speaker, and this loop-hole of escape from the final results was tightly closed. The Speaker hammered with his gavel so noisily that he seemed to be driving nails into his desk. "The vote will now be on the passage of the bill," he added.

"I demand the reading of the bill," said Mr. Springer.

The Clerk glanced at the immense pile of manuscript, looked imploringly at the Speaker and then began at a 200-words-a-minute rate. Mr. Buckalew moved to dispense with the reading, but Springer was inexorable and objected. He criticised, too, the speed of the Reading Clerk, but the latter did not put on the brakes for a single sentence. Gradually the hall emptied. Only sixty-one members were present and only one of these (Mr. Springer) was paying any attention.

He followed the reading, comparing the engrossed bill with the amendment printed copy he held in his hand. Every once in a while he halted the clerk and called attention to an error. Sometimes the clerk heeded him, but more frequently forged ahead without a stop.

Representative Cowles, the bald-headed, long-whiskered member from North Carolina, who has a big saber wound on his forehead, was next heard from. He made the point of order that a quorum was not present.

"That point cannot be raised until the lack of a quorum is shown by a vote," said Mr. Cannon.

So the Clerk read on.

"I demand that the Chair shall rule my point of order," shouted Mr. Cole at the silent figure in the chair.

The Reading Clerk turned around.

"Oh, go on," said the Speaker, and once more the Clerk's voice went rattly, rattly, rattly over the words of the bill.

"I appeal from the decision of the Chair," exclaimed Cowles, now mad enough to have thrown an inkstand at the Speaker. The latter laid his big arms in a semi-circle on the desk, buried his shiny face in the center of the circle, and gazed with intense interest at the stained glass in the ceiling. Rattly, rattly, rattly, continued the Clerk, while Mr. Cowles sat down with laughter for his pains.

The reading of the bill occupied over two hours and was concluded at 8:20 o'clock, whereupon the Speaker directed that the vote be taken upon the passage of the bill. The Democrats offered no protest. The roll-call was watched with greatest interest, but proceeded without interruption save some Republican applause for Mr. Butterworth's vote, until Mr. Coleman's name was reached. His loud, "no" was the signal for a Democratic demonstration of cheers and hand-clapping that lasted two or three minutes, and the same enthusiasm was shown when Mr. Lehlbach's negative vote was recorded. The Republicans, determined not to be outdone, uproariously applauded every Southern Republican who voted for the bill, Judge Houk of Tennessee, being the recipient of an especial ovation. When Mr. Springer voted the Democrats cheered and the Republicans satirically applauded, mingling groans with the noise of hand-clapping. Then the passage of the bill received by the Republican majority of some of the Democrats.

"Before that God of the universe," my friend from South Hemphill, Grover Clark, and had no right to a seat in the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] I declare that you have not an honest Democratic majority for twenty-five years and more on the Republican side.

From the speech of HENDERSON of Iowa Representatives June 23.
