THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1890. COULD EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION BE OVERTHROWN? Russia is moving for the construction of a great railroad from the center of the empire easterly and down the Amoor to the mouth of that stream.

Western Europe has been overrun more than once or twice by the swarming millions that poured out of the crowded hives of the far East. The millions of China added to those of India, make a sum which for mere numerical strength so far surpasses all the combined populations of Europe, that those latter sink into utter insignificance.

But so it was when the legions of Caesar met and subdued the hosts of the Gauls, Ariovistus and Orgetorix with their Helvetii, Marcomani, or other Germanic tribes. Yet in a few more generations we find these same tribes and others behind them sacking Rome, plundering Italy, overrunning Spain and taking possession of all the provinces conquered by the trained valor of the legions of a former time.

Be it remembered that this movement, as Gibbon shows in that matchless work on the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, began at the great wall of China. Alaman was impelled by Goth, he by Visigoth, he by Vandal, he by Hun and he by Tartar, until the remotest East was reached.

Could such a programme by any possibility be worked out again in the days to succeed ours? Let us see. England has made pretty good soldiers of the people of India. China is learning very rapidly the arts of modern war. She is arming her troops with European rifles, and she is acquiring a navy of very respectable efficiency. Granted that this is to go on, and that these people acquire a little experience similar to that gotten in the brush with the French in Tonquin. Assume that a few small encounters with Russian troops along the Amoor, and with other European armies at several points develop in the Chinese a little skill in handling their men in masses, and in the men a little skill in the use of their arms and in the evolutions of an engagement. Then assume a war in Continental Europe, which would embrace nearly all the more important powers. Array Russia and France against Germany and Austria, with their allies on both sides. Such a war would exhaust the strength of all Europe, both the strength of fighting men and that of financial means to carry on a war.

the leading role, and which in its probable realism will cast the old brochure of that name in the shade.

WHEN some poor uneducated servant girl blows herself up with an oil can, or some backwoods woman poisons her child with corrosive sublimate administered for castor oil, we all join in the indignant cries against the carelessness that is born of crass ignorance.

Witness the latest performance in this line, where the learned professor and "well-known scientist," as the dispatches have him, drinks embalming fluid for mineral water. But this Owen family, in spite of their Welsh extraction and Scotch acquirement of shrewdness, is somewhat subject to doing out-of-the-way things.

Robert Dale Owen, the brother of this one who embalmed himself too soon, is the fellow who wrote that curious book, "Footfalls on the Boundaries of Another World," which relates ghost stories as sober fact which cast the ghastly and hair-raising scenes in the "Three Spaniards" into obscure gloom.

REPUBLICANS, members of the Union League of this city, seem to be a peculiarly and lamentably purblind lot of people who cannot discern a good thing when they see it, "large as life," etc., before their very eyes. Here has been our distinguished and elegant chief magistrate, a man of weight, a man among a thousand, and another like him not in all the crowd, posing before these purblind politicians of this League for many days. He has been at gatherings of the clans, he has gone about the streets, he has made most liberal promises as to patronage, we may be allowed to conjecture. He has coquetted with the office-seeker, holding out the emoluments of sinecures to tempt the bashful eye of this class of citizens, and he fairly pranced before the non-office-seeking citizens with the legend, "Strictly Business," emblazoned on his banner.

Supposing some Democratic member of the Council did at some period near or remote refuse to let this city money out at interest, what has that to do with the matter before the people at this time? If these people did wrong some years ago, the fact that they were Democrats or anything else is no excuse for the present. Council not doing its plain duty. And if these Councilmen at that time forgot their duty to the people it cannot be alleged that the HERALD had any part in the affair one way or the other. The fact that a man has been of our party has never led this paper to stultify itself and betray the people by taking the part of any wrongdoer.

What a splendid opportunity there is here to put in operation the Wright act upon a vast and promising theater.

For Durability and Beauty, House owners should insist on having their pictures painted by the Sherwin-Williams painting company. Cor. Second and Main. Microbes, the Germ of Disease. Come to our office and receive information relative to the prevention of disease. Office, 1049 S. Broadway.

THE Chamber of Commerce is doing its true and legitimate work, and it is only fair that its new and efficient secretary should have his due meed of recognition. As a matter of fact, Mr. H. W. Patton has been a host in himself. He has been indefatigable, and to his personal sagacity and never intermitted labor is due, in great measure, this really creditable exhibit which now graces Mott's Hall.

A PASTORAL. A Section of Our County of Tremendous Possibilities. DEAR HERALD—I have never before seen this part of the country look so rich and luxuriant. The mesa for miles, as far as the eye can reach, is covered with grass, dense and high, and one regrets that all this luxuriant feed must be lost for the want of herds to crop it down.

All old residents of Los Angeles remember what we used to call the dry, hard-pan plains between this point and the Coyote ranch. In very exceptional wet years, a thin crop of grass and brr clover would make its way through the caked surface. This would afford feed for a short time to the roving bands of sheep belonging to our Basque herders.
