REPUBLICANISM IN IOWA IS ON THE RACK.

The party is split in two on the prohibition question, and that Janus-faced political organization is in the throes of dissolution over a mug of beer.

The local elections in several Western cities and townships on Tuesday went Democratic.

Milwaukee elects a Democratic Mayor, and the township elections in Illinois gave sweeping majorities to the Democratic tickets.

In Kansas sixty cities elected their local officers, and the Democrats got away with the lion's share.

"Dinna ye hear the slogan?"

A man named Paul James Gregory has been tried before the United States Court in Utica, New York, for abusing the mails by sending through them circular advertisements of a secret he says he possesses to enable any one to make any person of the opposite sex fall desperately in love with him or her.

A mass of interesting letters were read from persons of both sexes and of all ages, and the court, as well as those in attendance, were kept in convulsions of laughter at the contents of some of them.

The letters showed that Gregory ought to have been tried for the abuse of both sexes, for amongst his victims there were as many of the fair sex as males.

Newspaper men are beginning to be handsomely recognized in the distribution of appointments, and we must say that Harrison's administration has shown a much higher appreciation of the value of services in party politics of this class of people than any preceding ones.

Whitelaw Reid is made Minister to France; Charles Emery Smith to St. Petersburg, vice Thorndyke Rice (also a journalist), deceased; Elijah Halford becomes Harrison's private secretary; John C. New is appointed Consul-General at London, and now comes Henry T. Payne, of the Los Angeles Tribune, who is raised to the high and mighty position of storekeeper.

There is no telling what luck may fall to others of the tribe amongst our Republican conferees, as there are some tide-water places to fill at San Pedro, and a few more railroad postal clerkships lying around loose.

An instance of the contemptible littleness of the method of retrenchment adopted by the Council was had in the case of the girl, Jennie Wickersham, who died in the Station House yesterday.

When the doctors were called in to attend her the previous night, it was necessary to strip her. There was not a woman there to perform this delicate office, and it had to be done by men to whose gaze her nakedness was necessarily exposed.

The Council retrenched $50 a month by discharging Mrs. Gray, who was the female attendant in the Station House, and left such scenes of indecency as this of frequent possibility.

The $1,000 to $1,500 per month which the city is deprived of by the shenanigan which keeps her from placing her funds out at interest, would enable us to escape from the reproach of outraging in our public places the common decencies of life.

JINGO JIM BLAINE is like all blowhards, great in mere wind and froth and nothing as to action. To hear his party talk while Jim was coaching with Carnegie in Scotland, one might well suppose that were the jingo statesman Secretary of State and any rash foreigner should question any claim of the United States he would incontinently devour a whole nation of them.

Well, he is Secretary of State, and bluff John Bull is at the door to have a little talk about the seal fisheries. Jingo Jim is safe inside, and there "roars you as soft as any sucking dove." In other words, the only conclusion arrived at yet in regard to the seal fisheries is that the Canadian poachers have as much right to kill seals as the company to whom the United States sells the privilege with a promise to guard their rights; and that the United States must pay damages for all seizures heretofore "made by mistake."

There is a jingo for you, all noise and bluster, signifying nothing, and John Bull getting all he asks for and a little more!

A GREAT cry was raised in San Francisco some weeks ago about 20,000 unemployed men in that city. The relief committee found an actual 1,100 to put to work in the park. This number has dwindled down to 600, not because the men are discharged, but because they quit of their own accord.

When the attempt was made here to foist the infamous storm-drain bonds, and the quite as infamous outfall bonds on the city, the same howl went up about the unemployed. How little one hears of all this now the need of votes has ceased to press on the consciences of these self-appointed friends of the unemployed! It did San Francisco great injury to send out the false and sensational story of 20,000 idle people walking her streets. It did Los Angeles no good to spread the tale that there was an army of people here in actual want of the necessities of life. A newspaper's first duty is to tell the truth, not to create false issues in order to carry some scheme of a self-seeking ring.

EFFECT OF CLIMATE UPON ENERGY.

When the gold fever broke out so fiercely in the Atlantic States as soon as it was known that extensive placer discoveries had been made in California, the book most sought after by those seized with the epidemic was Richard H. Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast." It had a popularity which made a fortune for its publishers and which gave it a celebrity that but few new publications could attain in those days.

It was the simply-told story of a young man who had just graduated from Harvard, and who, on account of an affection of the eyes had concluded to take a long sea voyage where they would have a compelled rest from study. He chose to go to sea as a common sailor, and shipped before the mast on board the brig Pilgrim, which had cleared for a trading voyage to California.

Mr. Dana kept a diary from the time he left Boston until he got back two years afterwards, and the story of his experiences at sea, and especially in this then but little known and distant part of the world, possesses an interest even at the present day which is not surpassed by any book of travels or adventures we are conversant with.

For over a year, beginning with January, 1835, he was hide-droghing along this coast, and visited all the ports from San Diego to San Francisco, becoming personally acquainted with many people whose names have become historical in California, and especially with many in Los Angeles who have since been famous as pioneers of the pioneers.

On the same vessel with Mr. Dana was a youth who was compelled, on account of acute and constant suffering at sea from rheumatism, to abandon the ship and become a permanent resident of California. His name was Henry F. Mellus, and his descendants are numerous and well known here at this day.

He encountered that patriarch of pioneers, Don Juan J. Warner, who is still, we are glad to say, with us, and Alfred Robinson, who yet survives in San Francisco, and General Vallejo, who has just ended his long and notable career.

His descriptions of the country at that time are so accurate, and his appreciation of its possibilities so borne out by subsequent facts, that one is struck with admiration at his remarkable powers of observation. He speaks of our climate in the most glowing terms, and to read what he says about its matchless softness and equability, one would think he was perusing the every-day rhetoric of our local papers at the present time.

But there is one phase of his speculations which has, in the light of the facts that have been developed by nearly half a century of experience, proved to be altogether erroneous. After paying a glowing tribute to the fruitful character of the soil of California, its unlimited extent of fertile acres, the beauty and majesty of its scenery and its wealth of untouched resources both by land and water, he adverts to the listless and unenterprising character of its inhabitants, and fancies to himself what a magnificent development could be made here if California were only in the possession of Americans.

But then comes the afterthought, that if our people were settled here, they, too, would succumb to the "inevitable" effects of the soft and enervating climate, and in a generation or so would be as indolent and unenterprising as the Mexicans themselves.

The facts, of course, show that Mr. Dana's speculation has not been in effect realized. Indeed, he fell into the very common error that climate produces the same effects upon one race as upon another. Experience has shown that the energy of the Anglo-Saxon race is not materially affected by climate. It has not lost its vim in the tropics any more than it has been chilled by the hyperborean rigors of the high altitudes.

Wherever it has located, in the sweltering heats of Africa, India or America, it has lost none of its pristine energy, but exemplified its inborn spirit of push and enterprise in planning and carrying out works of magnitude, and leading the van in all the progressive steps of civilization.

The American element in California has for nearly half a century kept up its prestige and sustained its reputation for go-ahead activity and unflinching enterprise. It has energized every industry, and with its motto of "labor omnia vincit," it has turned our great State from a wilderness to a wilderness of magnificence and matchless possibilities into a commonwealth of marvelous production. It has transformed the thatched villages of Mr. Dana's time into cities of noble architecture and centres of all the great and varied industries known to the most advanced seats of civilization.

And where is that enervation which is said to be the "inevitable" result of a soft and genial climate? It is certainly not in the second or the third generation of Americans "natives here and to the manner born." Nor has it developed in the hardy pioneers who are yet to the fore and who have been here for more than a common lifetime. They are yet to be found in the forefront of the activities of our State, as alert in mind and as energetic in physique as any men of their years in any part of the globe.

Under these circumstances, we must look upon Mr. Dana's theory of the enervating effect of climate upon the verve and vim and energy and elasticity of the American character as an exploded error—one that has been theoretically deduced from its effects upon less sinewy, hardy and vigorous races than ours, but practically dissipated by the facts of actual experience when applied to the Anglo-Saxon race.

fact there will be great activity here next season in the way of vine planting.

And it is to be expected that now, or at some time in the future, this will take place. It is well known that the European vineyards were destroyed more than once by some mysterious disease, that disappeared after a while. Sometimes these visitations were local and at other times of a general nature; but none of them were of perpetual duration. The phylloxera has proved the most tenacious of all diseases of the vine, and thus far there are no signs of its abatement. Vines accounted resistant to this pest a few years ago, have succumbed to its insidious attacks, and are now as dead as those varieties that preceded them.

There is no reason to think that the vines of this district are affected at all with this insect pest, but all indications point to a vegetable form of disease as the one causing so much destruction in the past five years.

THE LIBRARY.

The Circulation Still on a Heavy Increase.

The board of directors of the Los Angeles Public Library met yesterday afternoon, President G. A. Dobinson in the chair, and Directors F. H. Howard, J. Mills Davies and H. Jay Hanchette and the librarian, Miss Tessa L. Kelso, present.

A communication was received from City Clerk Teed stating that the Council had given the library the use of the attic until it is needed for other purposes. The clerk of the board was instructed to communicate to the Council the fact that the board had taken possession of the attic and to request that the board be allowed to have signs placed on the electric-light posts in front of the city hall.

The librarian was authorized to arrange a portion of the main reading-room for the use of those who desire to work over reference books.

The librarian reported that during the month of March 648 new books and 3 periodicals had been added; that the circulation had increased to 11,436 volumes, and that 66 new names had been placed on the register. The daily average of books given out was 369, an increase of 19 per day over the month of February. The directors expressed themselves as of the opinion that no library of a like size under similar circumstances could show a record equal to that of the Los Angeles Public Library.

The committee on branch libraries reported that it had investigated the matter in all its phases, and had considered the expense, and had come to the conclusion that nothing could be done until after the next appropriation. It was decided to ask the Council to set aside enough money for the next tax levy to establish branches at the South End, Boyle Heights, East Los Angeles and the West End.

After the consideration of several other matters pertaining to the routine of the library the board adjourned.

THE INTERSTATE ASSOCIATION.

A Plan to Re-arrange the Disrupted Railroad Combine.

CHICAGO, April 2.—A meeting of the managers of the Western railroads was held today to consider a plan for the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Railway Association. Chairman Walker, Faithorne and Finley presented a majority plan providing a method for establishing rates, placing the responsibility of maintaining them on the presidents of the various lines. If the interested lines so agree they may arbitrate differences, an award to stand good for ninety days or more. The present associations will be subordinate to the general organization, and each will have a commissioner who will be a member of the executive committee. No penalties for violations are provided for. Chairman Middley, in a minority report, thought that each of the freight associations should be independent and not subordinate to the general organization. He thought that no contract should be effective unless it provided for a division of competitive traffic. Both reports were referred to a committee, who will report at a future meeting.

John Bull Getting the Best of the Bering Sea Negotiations.

NEW YORK, April 2.—The Herald's Ottawa, Ont., special correspondent says: I am credibly informed that the Bering sea negotiations at Washington are not advanced beyond the two preliminary stages of a tacit understanding that Bering sea is part of the high seas, the free pursuit of sealing in which can only be restrained by international action, and that a reasonable compensation must be made by the United States for past and mistaken disturbances of British sealing operations therein.
