A LITERARY PORTENT.

In the absence of the breadth and warmth which have characterized the accepted exemplars of genius in all well-known eras of literature, a school of fiction and drama has sprung up of late signified by extremes which may perhaps, with some propriety, be called the erotic and the rapid, most of the productions of the former class merging in the latter.

Ibsen has favored the dramatic form for his muse, and it is said that some of his esoteric and frightfully dull plays are being actually performed on the stage of some eccentric peoples. A poem by Martin Farquhar Tupper is a thing of surpassing interest compared to the sprightly dialogues that are the mainstay of Henrik Ibsen's plays.

The whole thing is pitched in the very highest grade of dull mock heroics. The dialogue is stupid all the way through, except when it is wicked. During the course of it the wife, who is preparing for a masquerade ball, slaps an old gentleman, who is very much enamored with her, on the cheek with a pair of her clocked stockings, asks him if he likes them, and inquires further if he thinks they will fit her.

"Ghosts" is another of these delightfully dull dramas, and in this a mother puts in a great deal of disquisition on matters which are generally confined to medical specialists and to the owners of certain proprietary medicines. The wind-up is lugubrious in the extreme, the son going dead, and varying the well-worn formula of wanting the earth by clamoring for the sun.

A third drama is taken up with the vagaries of a respectable member of society who has admitted into his family a woman with advanced ideas. He has a wife named "Beate," who soon becomes a dead-beat, for she goes off to a mill-pond in sight of the family mansion, and drowns herself.

California always comes to the front in capital style. She has put in the first claim for space at the great Columbian Exposition at Chicago. At the New Orleans Exposition our display was not only the most interesting but it was more interesting than those of all the Mummy of the age of Rameses the Second sit up and yawn. Ibsen is said to be a poet, to be profoundly inoculated with the notion that all human governments ought to be overturned and all the received ordinations of morals and society overturned.

A GREAT DEMONSTRATION.

The great labor demonstration in London yesterday, in which half a million people participated, is one of those impressive movements which possess an almost untold significance. It was orderly, but the more formidable on that account. It was in this respect far more impressive than the splenic outbursts reported from Spain and other Latin race countries.

They have preceded, accompanied and emphasized all the great advances in the line of humanity which have characterized the nineteenth century—an era most fecund in the amelioration of mankind. It does not do to undervalue the weighty import of the march of the democratic sentiment in view of the fact that the present century opened with one hundred and thirteen statutes on the law records of Great Britain, under any one of which a man might be hanged.

By all means give the country the Australian system, or any system that will do anything towards the protection of the voter's rights and that will help to brace the weak knees of a manhood that a two-dollar bill can carry; but do not dream of a political millennium while mean scoundrels will sell their birthright for $2, nor while exalted rascals will mouth hypocrisy, yet subscribe their money to corrupt elections.

That the Sixth-street Park is a beautiful spot cannot be doubted, but in addition to pleasing the eye there are certain esthetic demands that cannot be disregarded in its accessories, considering the large number of elegant Bostonians who will certainly follow in the wake of the charming operatic company of that name.

The Condensed Milk Made by the new factory, Buena Park, is the richest and purest in the market. Every grocery store has got it, and every person should ask for the "California Brand" of condensed milk. Remember it is absolutely pure, and besides being a home product, it is the best.
