THE ASHLEY HORROR.

NINETEEN DEAD MEN TAKEN OUT OF THE MINE.

Six Victims Still in the Fatal Pit—Assistant Mine Boss Allen Responsible For the Lives of His Companions.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 16.—Exploring parties have penetrated the mine at Ashley. They found nineteen dead, and six are still missing. It is more than probable that they, too, are dead.

Fire Boss Allen, rescued from the mine alive last night, died this morning.

The scenes around the mouth of the pit as the charred and unrecognizable bodies were brought up, was most heart-rending, women rushing to the mouth of the pit, wringing their hands and crying, as they tried to recognize the remains brought up one at a time on stretchers.

At 1 o'clock all except three of those in the mine at the time of the cave-in had been brought out. The body of Michael Henry, known to be under an immense pile of debris, may not be found for several days. John Allen, assistant boss, died this morning in great agony. Anthony Froyne and Robert W. Reaberts, the men rescued last night, are in a critical condition.

The negligence of Assistant Mine Boss Allen, who insisted on relighting a lamp in the presence of a large volume of gas, had he not done so the men now dead could all have been rescued alive, as there was a good current of air going through the chamber where the men had taken refuge after the cave-in had taken place.

The three men rescued last night separated from the others and advised them to follow, but they refused. They then walked along the gangway on their way out by the abandoned opening through which the rescuing party entered. When about 250 feet from the surface, Allen's lamp set fire to the gas, as above stated, and an explosion occurred. In the meantime the others who refused to follow were waiting at a distance of 500 feet further in the mine for a rescuing party to enter by the slope and rescue them by digging away the debris of the fall. It is presumed they were overcome by the aftermath of the explosion, and rendered unconscious.

At 8 o'clock this evening operations at the mine were abandoned. There are yet six men in the fatal chamber. Search will be resumed tomorrow.

FAITH REVISION.

Deliberations of the Presbyterian Assembly.

Report of the Committee on Revision.

The Debate Opened By President Patton of Princeton.

A Question Whether the Legislative Power Belongs to the Presbyteries or the General Assembly.

Associated Press Dispatches.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 16.—At the session of the Presbyterian general assembly this morning, the standing committee was appointed. The committee on the liquor traffic in the Congo state reported that they had tried to get congress to use its influence against the traffic, but as the United States was not a party to the Berlin treaty, no action could be secured at present.

It was voted that the action by the presbyteries on the question of revision be referred to a special committee. One hundred and thirty-two presbyteries had favored the proposed revision; sixty-six opposed it; seven declined to vote, and eight had not reported.

The committee on publications made two reports. The majority favors the establishment of a Presbyterian publishing house as an economical measure. Referred.

The committee on increasing the supply of efficient ministers reported that for every three churches organized one had died. This was mostly for the lack of efficient means; the total number of these dissolutions being 1,099 since 1871. It was recommended that schools for Bible readers and other lay workers be organized, and that fit laymen be licensed to preach, and theological seminaries are authorized to consider the expediency of providing special courses for promising young men who have not had classical training. Made the special order for Sunday.

The following committee on canvassing the votes of the Presbyteries on revision of faith was appointed: President Patton, of Princeton college; Dr. H. M. McCracken, New York; Rev. Dr. Edwards, and Elders Bradley and Thornton.

The committee on the method of effecting changes in the confession of faith and constitution of the church reported unanimously substantially as follows: The church, speaking officially through the Presbyteries, can alone determine with authority the questions at issue; therefore the committee recommends that the questions be transmitted to the presbyteries, whether there shall be added to the forms of government chapter XXIII of the amendment, providing for the proposal by the general assembly to the presbyteries of amendments or alterations in the form of government, the book of discipline and directory for worship; but that these shall not be obligatory unless the majority of all the presbyteries approve in writing; that alternating doctrinal standards shall not be proposed to the presbyteries unless they have been under consideration for one year by a committee of not less than fifteen ministers and elders, not more than two of whom shall be from one synod. No alteration shall be made in the provisions of this chapter for changes in doctrinal standards, unless an overture from the general assembly proposing alterations be transmitted to all the presbyteries, to be approved in writing by two-thirds of them. The assembly must transmit to presbyteries any overtures submitted to it. An amendment so submitted and approved shall go into effect at once after the general assembly shall have certified the fact.

The committee also recommended that the presbyteries be directed to answer the overture as a whole, by a single yea or nay, to be reported to the clerk in time to be presented to the next assembly.

President Patton, of Princeton, principal of the theological seminary, in opening the great debate on the report, said he objected to two of its features.

First—It denies to this assembly its legislative rights. What are we here for, if not to legislate?

Second—This takes away from the assembly not only the right to legislate but also that of deliberating. Suppose one-third of the Presbyteries overture the assembly for any given change in doctrinal standards. This report gives the assembly no option. It must send down the overture to the Presbyteries, and if two-thirds adopt or approve it the assembly has no choice but to declare the change, no matter how radical or revolutionary, adopted.

In Moore's digest of the Presbyterian law we read the following declaration: "The assembly orders that the Westminster confession is and is to continue to be our law, unless two-thirds of the Presbyteries oppose the changes desired, and in that case the assembly is to enact that the change be made." It does not declare it only, but enacts it. You cannot make a change in any way that invalidates an adopting act.

In conclusion he said: "I implore the assembly to move slowly in these critical times, when a single false step may lead us we know not where, and involve us in difficulties we dare not anticipate."

Rev. Dr. H. Van Dyke of New York, was delighted with the report, saying there is no line in the digest that confers that power. The presbyteries existed before the general assembly, and never gave it legislative power. There can be no action to change the standards, except by mutual cooperation between the assembly and presbyteries. The report seemed to him (Van Dyke) a peace measure, prescribing a fair and practical method of coming to an understanding.

Dr. Van Dyke added that for twenty-five years he had been growing convinced that revision was sure to come. "You can no more stop it than you can keep back spring by piling up last winter's ice."

Judge Wilson, of Philadelphia, spoke as a member of the committee. He said the report was not made primarily to favor revision or anti-revision. It was framed as the best way to extricate the church from the conflict as to the force and meaning of the adopting act, which has gone on ever since its enactment.

"In making the report we aimed to keep what is vital, and at the same time to put the great essential principle forever hereafter beyond dispute, except by those bound to have a fight anyway. The report does not interfere with the legislative power of the assembly, if it has any, but on the other hand gives it greater power of conservation and regulation. Practically any amendment to the standards must be formulated in the assembly, because the presbyteries have not the needed facilities for consultation. They may propose, but the assembly must co-ordinate their propositions. The assembly ought not to have such legislative power as to veto amendments proposed by one-third of the presbyteries and adopted by two-thirds."

"President Patton has no legal foundation for the argument that the adopting act is the unalterable law of the church. Could not the power that made, repeal it? The adopting act seems to have been largely framed for the very purpose of facilitating orderly and peaceable amendments. It was not by any means meant to be a strait-jacket that could never be enlarged or altered in shape."

Judge Junkin, of Philadelphia, spoke against revision, and the matter went over until tomorrow.

THE ARNOLD TRIAL.

THE DEFENDANT TELLS HIS STORY IN COURT.

How He Was Persecuted by Blackmailing Circulars—The Mystery as to Their Authorship Unbalanced His Mind.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—D. H. Arnold took the stand on his own behalf today, in his trial for killing Garness. He specified the times and places at which derogatory circulars about his wife were received. The circulars were introduced in evidence, and read, and envelopes bearing the addresses of various parties in Colusa who received the circulars were offered in evidence by counsel, who stated that his object was to show that the handwriting was that of Garness. The court refused to allow the envelopes to be introduced until the persons who received them had been called as witnesses. Arnold, however, identified a number of them as having been handed him by prominent Colusa people.

This afternoon the defendant was taken from the stand a while, and J. M. Ward, formerly city editor of the Examiner, testified that last fall Garness gave him a circular reflecting on Arnold's family, and asked him to mail it to Arnold and write a letter stating that the circular had come to the Examiner through the mails, and that Garness had told him its contents were untrue and had advised the Examiner to have nothing to do with it. Witness said he did as Garness requested. Ward further stated that Garness afterwards told him the matter would make an interesting story, and asked him to find a reporter to write it up. Witness sent a reporter to Garness but he returned and said he did not care to undertake the task. Witness subsequently saw the story in manuscript in Garness's hands. He directed it to the Post, and Garness took it to that paper, where it was published next day. The article recalled the matters mentioned in the circulars, and spoke of Arnold's efforts to hush the affair up.

The defendant was again called to the stand, and detailed the conversations he had had with Garness and several newspaper men about the circulars. He also described the condition of mind which the circulars caused him. In three months he did not sleep soundly more than an hour at a time, and his health became impaired in his anxiety to discover the author of the circulars.
