Sweeping Scope of the Arid Lands Bill.

Secretary Noble Delivers an Opinion.

A Nebraska Village Obliterated by a Cyclone.

Many Reported Killed and Injured—The Destruction of Loveland, Iowa, Completed.

Associated Press Dispatches.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The secretary of the interior today transmitted to the senate an opinion by the attorney-general, construing the act of October 2, 1888, which appropriated the sum of $10,000 for investigating the extent to which the arid region may be recovered by irrigation. The opinion is transmitted in response to a resolution by the senate inquiring particularly as to the views of the interior department, concerning the scope and effect of the following section of the act of October 2: "And all lands which may hereafter be designated or selected by such United States surveys for sites for reservoirs, ditches, or canals for irrigating purposes, and all lands made susceptible of irrigation by such reservoirs, ditches or canals, are from this time henceforth reserved from sale as property of the United States, and shall not be subject after the passage of this act, to entry, settlement or occupation until further provided by law." The attorney-general stated his conclusion as follows: "The object of the act is manifest that it was to prevent the entry and settlement and sale of all that part of the arid region of the public lands of the United States, which could be improved by a general system of irrigation, and all lands which might hereafter be designated or selected by United States surveys as sites for reservoirs, ditches or canals in such systems. It was the purpose of congress by this act to suspend all rights of entry upon any lands which would come within the improving operation of plans of irrigation, to be reported by the director of the geological survey under this act. The language could hardly be stronger than the words of the act in expressing this intention. Entries should not be permitted, therefore, upon any part of the arid regions which might possibly come within the operation of this act."

The general effect of this opinion is that if the law is not modified it will reserve from settlement and entry practically the whole of the great arid region of the west. The secretary, in his letter of transmittal, suggests that if congress does not fully concur in the purposes of the law, it should take the business in hand at once, to so modify it as it may deem the public interests require.

A DOOMED HAMLET.

Demolition of the Village of Loveland, Ia., Completed.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, June 3.—The village of Loveland seems doomed. Last Saturday night a cloudburst carried away a number of houses and buildings. The bayou, which was swollen by the previous storm, overflowed from last night's rains, and carried everything before it. Nothing is left of the hamlet save the houses which stood on high ground. No loss of life is reported thus far.

"We can only imagine," the Times says, "that pressure from the Irish-Americans induced Blaine to withdraw from his apparent desire for a diplomatic settlement. The terms in which the invitation is expressed convince me that the question of tariff reform is receiving the attention it deserves from those most vitally interested in its just and fair solution. I know that with the feeling now abroad in our land, with the intense activity of such clubs as yours, the claim presumptuously made that the people at the last election finally passed upon the subject of tariff adjustment, will be emphatically denied, and that our workmen and our farmers will continue to agitate this and all other questions involving their welfare with increasing zeal and in the light of increased knowledge and experience until they are determined finally and in accordance with the American sentiment of fair play. I use no idle form of words when I say that I regret that my engagements and professional occupation will not permit me to meet the members of your club on the occasion of their mass meeting. I hope those who are fortunate enough to participate will find it to their profit, and that their meeting in all respects will be a great success."
