

THE TIME CAME.

"Oh, if Dick would only do something," sighed Millicent very softly to herself. "I do believe if it were nothing more than getting run over by a carriage with nobody in it, so he would not really be hurt very much, that papa would be so pleased he would let us marry each other after all. But Dick won't. I'm afraid he'll never do anything. He never has. And then she looked over at Dick, who sat very meekly on the other side of the room twirling his gloves listlessly, and she pouted. "I suppose you are pouting at me," said Dick. "Yes," she answered. "I'm sorry," he continued. "I suppose it's because I don't amount to anything?" "Of course it is, Dick," she answered. "Well, what in the world can I amount to?" asked Dick dejectedly. "I cannot go and make a fortune, for I'm rich already. I can't find a great fortune, because ours has been as good a one for centuries as a fellow can wish, and besides that would take too long. I haven't the talent to be an artist. I haven't brains enough to be a professional man. Every one agrees on that. I am too small to be a soldier, and if I went into business it would only be a question of time before I'd lose my money instead of making any. They all agree on that too. All I can be is a gentleman, and no one seems to care anything about a gentleman any more. I believe your father would like me better if I were an adventurer."

She had hard work to prevent herself from laughing outright. She had been in the identical spot where Dick now stood but a moment before, and she knew that the basement was as still as the grave. It was his frightened imagination, that was all. She would see the thing out. Perhaps Dick was afraid after all. She whispered again. "Do you want a revolver?" she asked. "No," he answered. "I wouldn't know what to do with it if I had one." Then she saw him disappear down the stairs. She went back into the parlor and picked up his hat. She smiled as she noticed how new it looked, just like everything else he had. Then she tried it on and stood before the glass wondering if it wouldn't make a pretty riding hat. She remembered that if any other man were to come back into the parlor and find her with his hat on her head he would promptly demand a kiss, after the good old custom. But Dick—no, Dick would never think of such a thing, or dare to do it if he did. Presently she wondered why he was gone so long. He wasn't afraid of the dark after all. He must have decided on a very thorough search. She wished her father would come down stairs and discover that Dick had done at least that much in the world. But no; she could hear her father walking up and down the room immediately above her, thinking of all sorts of things that he called important, but which did not interest her at all. She was just beginning to feel lonely and to wish that Dick would get through and come back when she heard a dull sound, as though something heavy had fallen in the kitchen. There was silence for a moment after that, and then she heard a great crashing of glass and she heard Dick call lustily for the police. Her heart leaped up into her throat. She wanted to call him to come back to her as he loved her, but she could not utter a word. She ran to the front window in her fear and threw it open. A stockily built fellow who looked gigantic in the half light of the street lamps was just making his escape through the gate and down the street, while right underneath her, bareheaded, but still with his immaculate gloves in his hand, Dick ran after him, still calling at the top of his voice for a policeman. She saw them go, forty feet apart, down the street at the best speed they could make. She saw them disappear from the light of one street lamp and come out into the light of another twice, and then she saw the stockily built fellow wheel quickly around; she saw a little sharp line of flame; she heard a loud report; and then—she fainted. It was but half an hour later that a cab drove up to the colonel's door, and Dick alighted—not the immaculately clad Dick that he usually was, but Dick with a bloody handkerchief tied around his head, and with much dirt on his trousers, and his necktie all awry, and with no gloves at all. He did not have to ring at the door, for it was opened ere he was half way up the front steps by the colonel himself, who came out with his great grizzled hand outstretched toward him. "I came back to get my hat and overcoat," Dick began to apologize. "No, you didn't," said the colonel, shaking his head heartily. "You came back to see Millicent. Did you get the fellow?" "Yes, sir; a policeman caught him eventually, and he's in the station house now."
