SELECT POETRY.
SEPTEMBER.
September strews the woodland o'er,
With many a brilliant flower;
The world is brighter than before-Why should our hearts be duller?
Sorrow and the sorrier let us leave; Sad thoughts and sunny weather!
Ah! this is glory and this ease; Agree not with together.

As You Sow so Will You Reap.
BY MILOTIS.
Parents who lead a virtuous life, who sincerely guard to retain a good clear conscience, and be honorable before God and men, have as one of their highest aims of life to make their children happy. There is no sacrifice too great which they will not cheerfully make, in order to secure their welfare, and for which they deserve from their neighbors the highest consideration and praise.

What have we for breakfast? he asked affectionately.
"Hash, biscuits and coffee."
"Hash and biscuits? You frightened me; I have had enough hash and biscuits in the boarding houses." They repaired to the table, its snowy white linen, the polished cutlery, the steaming hash with its inviting flavor, the tender biscuits, the butter crowned with its little bit of ice, the vice coffee and cream, all have such an inviting appearance that the husband sits down, tastes of the hash and biscuits-"Ah!" exclaims he, "this hash and biscuit is different from the boarding house hash and their stone-like biscuits; but why don't you eat?"
"I cannot eat a bite if you do not say a prayer with me first. My good mother learned me to make this hash and biscuit, but she also learned me to pray and give thanksgiving to God.
In my parents' house we always prayed before we partook of a meal. Do, my dear, the same, - you will make me so happy.

It is the aim of my life whatever I do to do it well, and hope to improve in praying. You have turned my attention to be thankful to God for the many blessings that He so bountifully showers upon us. We will both of us be good, will we not?" asked the husband earnestly.
"Ye, we will be just like parents, cheerful, industrious, self-relying, charitable and saving."
"That is my view of life, but I must be off to my work. Shall I advertise for a girl?"

No was the prompt reply: "Mother says that a servant girl costs per week, wages, board, and what she wants, at least six dollars - that would be nearly one-third of your weekly earnings. Thank God, I can do without a servant girl, and save that much to my darling husband!" There is a parting kiss between which two hearts are forever blended into one.

Years pass away, and six pledges of love now sit at the dining table, each rosy, and the very picture of health, and the happy mother shows no signs of fatigue. As she serves the noon meal the father gives the sign, the children clasp their hands and follow in the prayer of their parents.
"Husband you do not eat as heartily as usual, and seem lost in thought; what is the matter? You never had any secrets which I could not share."
"Ye," answered the husband, "I have something on my mind. My employers are in a critical condition.
All the partners lived high, drew too much from the business, and now they are forced to sell out. The few thousand dollars that I have laid up, are not sufficient; if I could make a loan of several thousand dollars, I could buy out the entire concern at a great bargain, and, under my management, it would yield a large income, and as our family is a growing one, it would be desirable, and besides that, I could, by-and-by, take my boys in business, learn them the trade, and this would be excellent in the future."

Father will let you have the money.
They have invited us several times to dinner, and I will follow your suggestion.
There was a gay time at the old folks', when the daughter with her exemplary husband, and their well-brought up children arrived. The Christmas Trees were in splendid trim, and grandfather jumbled about like a boy. "Everything is all right," said he.
"Thou son-in-law is a capital fellow, but there is one thing that I do not like, he has never asked of me a favor, I would feel more fatherly toward him if I could render him a favor."
"Father," exclaimed the daughter, "could I and my husband talk to you in private on business?"
"Certainly," said he. "Thanks to the Builder of all the world, now come my chance to show myself that I am a good father."

Curiosities of Breathing.
The taller men are, other things being equal, the more lungs they have and the greater number of cubic inches of air they can take in or deliver at a single breath. It is generally thought that a man's lungs are sound and well developed in proportion to the girth around the chest, yet observations show that slim men as a rule, will run faster, and further with less fatigue, having "more wind" than stout men. If two persons are taken, in all respects alike, except that one measures twelve inches more around the chest than the other, the one having the excess will not deliver more air at one full breath, by mathematical measurement, than the other.

Yes, my dear son, you can have ten thousand dollars without interest; I don't want your note, just give me credit in your books, and you need not pay it all back in one year; don't crowd yourself, if I have it all back in two years it will do. I was no spendthrift in my young days. I and my wife did not live in grand style. We always lived well, but plain; worked all we could ourselves, and did not throw our money away foolishly, and now we are in a position to assist our deserving children. Our children are all deserving children. Thanks to the Builder and Preserver of all the worlds, we have model sons and model daughters."
If parents like to have model sons and model daughters, they must set the example of humility before God, of industry and temperance in their mode of living. The plainer and more unassuming they live, the better it will be for them and their children; and let their sons, by all means, learn a trade, and encourage them to become master mechanics.

And let their daughters learn practically the art of cooking and housekeeping, that they may retain health and grow physically strong, to be enabled to fulfill the duties of wife and mother and to be a helpmate, as God has ordained. The fashions of our day spoil, and the penalty is a life of misery without issue and an early grave - Alena optimum innoxia - it is well to prout by the madness of others.

A Murderer Buried Alive.
The Memphis (Tenn.) Avalanche of Aug. 12, says: The officers of the steamer Check tell of the lynching of Beek, who is said to have murdered Mr. and Mrs. Goode, on Favorite Island two months ago. Beek was in Austin (Miss.) jail, where he had been placed by the sheriff of Tunica county, who had brought him from Indiana a few days ago. On Wednesday morning a large number of men gathered around the jail in Austin, took the prisoner out by force, brought him down to the river bank, placed him in a skiff, and rowed him up the river to Favorite Island, and hanged him to a tree over the spot where the aged Goodes fell beneath the murderer's axe some two months before. A proper investigation would have accomplished all this if the man was guilty. When will people learn to have confidence in and respect for the law? Another account, from what appears to be a reliable source, says that there was no lynching, properly so called, but that the men took Beek out of jail, manned a fleet of skiffs, as a sort of guard, and the prisoner was rowed across the river by the waning light of the moon on Wednesday morning about three o'clock, to a sand-bar on the Arkansas Shore, and there, under the long shadows of the trees, the crowd gathered around their victim and feasted their drunken eyes upon his pallid face, trembling lips and tottering limbs, while oaths and blasphemies disturbed the quietude of the morning air. As the first gray streaks of dawn shot upward scoped out of the sand by a lot of men who appeared at that moment, more like demons than human beings, - Binding the wretch's hands and feet together, they threw him into the hole.
Two or three of the stoutest stood upon his body while the hole was being filled up, lifting their feet every now and then to keep on a level with the rising sand. As the sand went in the men actually danced upon the smothering victim beneath, and the whole crowd broke out in an unsightly song. At length, when the hole was filled up and heaped over, a "stag dance" was improvised, and the twenty vigilantes carried on the revel until the sun rose above the horizon, when they hurried to their skiffs and disappeared up and down the river along the Mississippi shore.

Keeping Grapes Under Ground.
A correspondent of the Grape Culturist says:
"Many years ago, while in the nursery business, a customer wanted some vines of me, and while they were being dug up he asked me if I kept my grapes over winter. This was in March. Of course he got a negative reply.
" Well," said he, "when I come next week for trees I will bring you some along!"

The thing seemed but a joke to me at the time, but of course I thought him for the kind offer. True to his promise, when he came a week or ten days thereafter, he brought me some.
Not a few berries, as might have been expected, but at least five pounds. - They were Isabella and Catawba, perfectly plump, sweet and fresh, although most of the berries had dropped from their stems. With the exception of a very slight earthy taste, they were certainly excellent.

The question, of course, was asked how do you keep them thus? The reply was that, in the fall, as late as the cold would admit, they were gathered in a clear day, when perfectly dry; a layer of green leaves was taken from the vines and laid on the bottom; on these a layer of grapes, and then a layer of leaves again, until the box was full, finishing with a layer of leaves.
Put the lid on tight, and bury deep enough to escape the frosts of winter.
Of course it must be where water can not settle into the box. The stems of these grapes were quite fresh when given to me.

The man told me his father-in-law had kept them thus for years.
To this the editor of the journal adds:
" We have often dug up bunches of grapes on layers, late in the fall, when all the grapes on the vines had been frozen long before, and found them plump, sweet and fresh. We do not doubt the method is a good one and worth a trial."

WHY. - A green looking chap, from the Green Mountain State, went over the line, and on to Montreal, "to look around a little." Going into a hotel and handsome dry-good house, his ter-dancy attracted the attention of the proprietor, who attempted to quash him, but having an impediment in his speech, he had to give it up, and his clock came forward to speak for him.
He began -
" Mr. Bull wishes to know if you SHED CORN. - Now is the time for farmers to gather their seed corn for next year. If every farmer would go into his field, and select the best ears, gather enough for next year's seed and place it where it would get thoroughly dry before freezing weather there would be no trouble about corn rotting in the ground. The experience that many of our farmers had last spring and the anxiety about the Southern corn not ripening ought to convince that a half days work now might save much trouble. Our experiences and suggestions.
