Election Time, Nov. 6.

THE DEMOCRAT who is a sincere protectionist will this year vote the straight Republican ticket. The Democrat who tries to pretend that he is a protectionist had better quit his fooling.

Brice a Bad Bargain.

Senator Brice, when interviewed relative to the remarkable scene in the Democratic state convention at Columbus Wednesday, affected to treat it as of slight significance and called attention to the fact that the opposition to him came principally from delegates representing Republican counties. This may be true, yet in his soul he must know that the scathing denunciations of Orator John H. Clark were honest reflections of the better sentiment of the party and of the people; and not simply the vapors of an excited factionalist.

Senator Brice is objectionable, not because he is rich—honestly acquired wealth is a token of credit, not of shame. He is objectionable, not because he endeavored, in some instances while in the senate, to interpose his vote as a restraining influence against the overflying tide of Populist ignorance and delusion. The reasons which invest his name with a repugnant significance have to do with none of these things. They have to do with daring and unscrupulous campaign methods, with intimate affiliations with giant monopolies and trusts, and with a general trend of public service which, whenever necessary to the protection of favorite special interests, has not scrupled to ignore the general welfare as a thing too trivial for a senator's consideration.

The United States senate is degenerate in that it is a possible abode for men like Brice. Before he was elected to it he had given no evidence of ability sufficient to justify such a mark of public confidence. He had done nothing as a legislator; he was unknown as a statesman; the most that could be said for him was that he had prospered mightily as a speculator and had negotiated daring deals in stocks and bonds. Underneath his public career there ran no vein of unselfishness, no hint of sincerity. He was a speculator, in every sense of the word, never less and never more. His election to a seat made famous by really great men was simply a huge game of political chance in which he handled the gilded cards that won.

The Ohio Democracy was particeps criminis; but it is something in its favor that it has grown dissatisfied with its bargain.

HARRITYMAN and McAlberism got a touch of political rheumatism at the Philadelphia Democratic primaries Wednesday; but their real time to be sick will not be until the fore part of November.

The Disappearing Mania.

The recent disappearance of a Carbondale young man adds another to the long list of individuals who have mysteriously vanished after the manner of the ideal orphan of yellow fiction, who is expected to turn up a few years later with whiskers on his countenance and gold eagles in his pockets. The number of people who yearly disappear without any apparent cause is upon the increase and does not appear to be confined to any particular district. A sad feature in connection with the business is the fact that occasionally a useful member of society is seized with the oblivion mania and packs his grip with the haste of the trusted bank cashier and vanishes upon the thin air, as it were. As the disease is confined to no one class of people it is impossible to diagnose the symptoms of sudden departure or provide remedies for the incurable.

The mania that prompts people in apparent good health and circumstances to seek seclusion away from home, friends and about all that we should live for, can never be satisfactorily explained, though it is generally accepted as an indication that a skeleton, word and ghostly, may have haunted the home of the departed with a persistence that made life in the neighborhood unbearable. The individual who ends a tiresome life with bullets or rat poison usually leaves something behind that indicates the cause of his earthly weariness, but the man who runs away in most instances casts a shadow of mystery upon his movements that is puzzling in its impetuosity, and inflicts a greater punishment upon anxious friends in suspense than the knowledge of his death would bring.

WE DO NOT believe that there is a wish on the part of representative Stranahan to impose on the Scranton Traction company. All that the public wants is reasonable and fair consideration, and this they have a right to expect. When the street railway company promises to do a thing it ought to do it. It has promised to do its share toward grading Mulberry street out to the new boulevard. It has not yet fulfilled this promise. Can it afford, under any circumstances, to show a want of faith? Is it the policy of wisdom to make promises and not keep them? The Philadelphia interests in this company would not do that way in Philadelphia. Why should they require their local representatives to do that way in Scranton?

Stranahan's Last Hope.

Chairman Stranahan intimates that General Hastings, as he travels through the state, "will find all the coke ovens in operation, the mines running merrily, a traffic on the railroads now almost beyond the capacity of the lines, the furnaces aglow everywhere, business reviving in every direction and a change of conditions in everything under the beneficent rulings of the new tariff law and the settlement of the tariff agitation. There is no question but that prosperity has returned and business depression is at an end. With vicious legislation out of the way and the way paved to better conditions in the wool, and the cotton, and the iron trades, I apprehend that the sober second thought of the people will better the Democratic organization in every direction."

The "beneficent rulings of the new tariff laws" would have been a great deal more beneficent had they let the tariff question alone and saved the country two years of awful panic. Even now Mr. Cleveland is not satisfied with these "beneficent rulings" which he declares constitute "outrageous discrimination and violation of principle," and wants to tinker awhile longer, so as to make them more "beneficent." We suspect that General Hastings will not be sorry to see the coke ovens in operation, the mines running merrily and the railroads humming. If the people take his advice this kind of thing will not be so exceptional as to constitute a political party's only ground for hope.

IT WOULD be like Hill to run for governor, hanging on to the senatorship meantime, until the cat had jumped. He did the reverse of this when he was made senator; and what Hill has done Hill undoubtedly can repeat. No doubt Hill has strengthened himself in popular estimation since last he ran for an elective office. But strong or weak, he will be as chaff before the gale of Republicanism in November. The people have had enough of Democracy in all its phases. They have experimented and lost. They want next time to deal with certainties. With Hill as an antagonist, Mr. Morton's plurality in New York might be kept down to 75,000, but this is the utmost that the Machiavellian David could reasonably expect.

Morality's Narrow Escape.

It is undoubtedly true that, for purposes of self vindication, the Ashland district could have returned a much larger plurality for Colonel Owens than it did, without doing the cause of morality any harm. The fact that Owens was barely saved from defeat by the vote of his own county, Scott, which ranks among the "back woods" counties of the district, while in the intelligent and wide-awake county of Fayette, the home of the very first families of the blue grass aristocracy, Breckinridge was successful against the united protests of the churches, of women singing and praying and of all the forces of morality in militant array, receiving in Fayette 235 plurality, while the famous city of Lexington gave him 1,674 more than both his antagonists combined, does not indicate either a high order of morals or a large amount of discrimination among these chivalric southerners.

But we are not prepared, despite these discouraging figures, to agree with the Pittsburgh Times that there "does not appear to be a particle of evidence" that the issue in this national battle of decency against defiant vice "was determined by other than local interests which would have been against Breckinridge had his reputation not been sullied." It is indeed remarkable that Colonel Breckinridge, with so bad a case, should have made so formidable a showing. But, with his family name and prestige, reinforced by the southern exclusiveness which resents often the plain voice of duty as an interference, we are prepared to believe, rather, that he would have won, had the moral opposition been less determined. He was not the first man to breast public clamor because of private indiscretion. Had he given any true token of penitence, instead of making his flaunted sin a political capital, it is easy to believe that he would have won both a re-nomination and a re-election, by possibly increased majorities.

manly warnings of such able and trust-worthy Democratic leaders as Colonel Henry Watterson and dozens like him, elicited by the audacity of Colonel Breckinridge's course, had their effect. To deny this, even in Kentucky, would be to strike a blow at morals from which there is no escape. The people of the south may be more than ordinarily resentful of scandal, and more than customarily firm in their admiration for men who, although bad, are likewise brilliant and brainy. But we do not believe that they are the kind of people to shirk a responsibility when once it is put squarely to them; and until there is no more contrary evidence than superficial election returns in which fraud may have played an important part, we shall continue to regard the verdict of last Saturday as far-reaching in its vindication of personal purity in public life.

THE LEHIGH county farmer who yesterday ended his life because Democratic supremacy, instead of giving him dollar wheat, as promised, had driven him financially to the wall make a mistake. He should have lived, voted the Republican ticket next November, pitched into work and, in due time, been happy.

THIS IS A YEAR of surprises, and not the least of them is the fact that the voters of the Third congress district have been spared the necessity of retiring William McAleer, that act having been unexpectedly achieved for them by the Democrats themselves.

THE YORK GAZETTE, one of the oldest newspapers in interior Pennsylvania, has just issued its first Sunday number, a handsome one of twelve neat pages. The Gazette is off color, politically, but in other respects it is first-class. Success to it.

POLITICAL NOTES.

THE facts in the Forty-ninth judicial district Republican caucus are anything but helpful to K. Allen Lovell, the candidate of Huntington county. They are as follows: When Judge Furst, the sitting judge, and John G. Love became candidates for Center county's nomination, it was understood that Huntington would present no candidate. Mr. Lovell, who is now Huntington's candidate, signed a public letter favoring Judge Furst's re-nomination. Mr. Love defeated Judge Furst at the Republican primaries in Center county by a vote of 1,411, or 2,269 to 1,197. The Huntington primary had been fixed for one week later than those in Center, and it was expected that Mr. Love would receive its endorsement without opposition. Both he and Judge Furst had registered there four weeks before, but no home candidate presented himself until 9 o'clock of the last day for registering, ten days before the election. Judge Furst registered there the Center primaries. Then Mr. Lovell, who had signed a letter in favor of Judge Furst and told Mr. Love he would vote for him, if Mr. Love interested and entered the field. Mr. Love declined to canvass Huntington against Mr. Allen, and so announced through the county papers, but nevertheless received 371 votes there to 1,411 for Mr. Lovell. In the two counties Love received 2,744 votes, or 48 more than were given to both Judge Furst and Mr. Lovell, their combined vote being 4,606. Their preference has been deduced since its first meeting. At the last meeting Mr. Love addressed a letter to Mr. Lovell proposing that the choice question of the ticket be referred back to the Republicans of the two counties, and that their votes settle it. Mr. Lovell declined the proposition and hangs out for the nomination.

Although he is practically sure of the result, ex-representative E. B. Hardenbergh, Republican candidate for senator in the Twenty-sixth district, is prosecuting a rigorous campaign. The Wayne Independent this week prints a good likeness and readable sketch of Mr. Hardenbergh, coupled with an instructive resume of his legislative achievements. One act of his alone would entitle him to grateful remembrance by his constituents. That was his bill providing for the condemnation of toll gates on the public highways, where they had become a nuisance. Thanks to this measure, there is but one toll gate now in the whole of Wayne county. Mr. Hardenbergh is known as a most diligent and energetic legislator and also as a first class Republican. His majority this year, with Galleria A. Grow on the ticket, ought to exceed the 2,677 plurality cast for Mr. Grow in February.

Thompson Burton, president of the Danville company, of Greensboro, G. W. has been spoken of as a candidate for congressional honors on the Democratic ticket in that district, in reply to an inquiry declares that he is in no sense a candidate and airs his views on the subject in the following caustic reply: "I am anti-administration, an avowed and emphatic foe of the Wilson bill and all Wilson bills, Hicks Smithism, and the whole anti-Democratic policy of infamy of Mr. Cleveland and his retinue of unregenerated bills and sally degenerated Republicans in cabinet and important positions at home and abroad. Under these circumstances you will readily comprehend that I have not been and cannot be a candidate at this time." There will be good many Burtons in the country on Nov. 6.

Editor Ben Haines, of the Honesdale Independent, who has dabbled in all sorts of politics in his time and who is just now hovering near the free trade chicken, has felt himself called upon to answer some of Dr. Strong's arguments in favor of a protective tariff. Not being able to put any kind of a defense for the Democratic cause, he takes refuge in personalities. Dr. Strong in a letter to the Honesdale Citizen not only wipes the floor up with Brother Haines, but makes a sortie or two into the adjacent closets, which must have made the free trade champion extremely weary.

A ratification meeting in honor of the state, legislative and county tickets, has been arranged by the Central Republican club for Oct. 5, at the Frothingham theater. Among the noted speakers thus far secured are Hon. Linn Hartman, son of the late Governor Hartman, and Hon. George B. Orady, the silver-tongued orator of Huntington, who is known far and wide for his first nomination of General Hastings for governor. The Frothingham has also been secured for the monster Hastings meeting Oct. 22.

There will be a general meeting of the candidates and county committee Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at county Republican headquarters in the Price Building on Washington avenue.

POLITICS WHITTLED DOWN: Benjamin F. Hayward, of Mercer, has everything his own way for state treasurer in 1895.

Ex-Secretary of War Stephen B. Elkins admits that he is a candidate for senator from West Virginia.

William F. McCully, business manager of the Evening Bulletin, a Republican paper, came near getting the Democratic nomination for treasurer of Philadelphia county.

Nevada Republicans demand the resignation of United States Senator John P. Jones, saying he does not represent the party that elected him, as he is a Populist. But Jones sticks.

Postmaster Warfield, of Baltimore, has appointed Senator Gorman in the face by appointing a batch of the Maryland senators' bitter political enemies to fill places in the postal service.

REPORTING CONGRESS' WORK.

Congressman Van Vorhis. No doubt you have seen descriptions of the way the proceedings are now reported. They have a corps of the best stenographers available. Each man takes the proceedings for ten minutes at a time, following the speakers about from place to place the better to take what they say. At the end of ten minutes the reporter is relieved and he steps into the lobby and reads what he has taken down into the phonograph. Then he is ready to take his turn again. The phonographs are constantly kept in order by an expert electrician and no there is no trouble from that source. The evidences are sent to the copyists and before a man has finished his speech a part of it is written out and twenty minutes after he has finished he can get a type written copy.

Another Infernal Machine. Philadelphia Record. A local electrical firm has just placed on the market an "early riser" or "dry battery." It is designed to be placed on the inside of the bedroom door, and the touching of a button, which protrudes through to the outside, sets to ringing, and it can only be stopped by the sleeper, who must get out of bed in order to stop it.

Important, If True. Hazleton Plain-Speaker. There is a pressing demand at present from all parts of the country for all kinds of railroad equipments and steel mills and railway workshops find it difficult to keep up with the orders.

THE HAMLET OF HOCUS PO.
