CHAPTER I—CONTINUED. He followed reluctantly, lured by the wish to see the attractive countenance in the full light, but resolving as he went that he would make an excuse to leave at once.

She went so quickly and he so slowly, that she had entered the dining room by the time George reached the hall. She held the door of the room invitingly open, and spoke again as he stood that in hand, on the threshold of the house.

"Won't you take off your coat and shake the snow off before you come in? Then, when this storm has passed, you will be able to start on your way again quite dry."

"I am deeply obliged to you for your kindness," said George, who was utterly bewildered by the situation in which he found himself, so that his words came haltingly from his tongue.

"Seen in the bright light of the lamp which hung from the hall ceiling, his unconventional hostess was even more beautiful than she had looked outside in the darkness. She was tall and fair, with a figure more suggestive of strength than is usual in young women, almost masculine, indeed, in its unpinched, natural waist and rather square shoulders. A massive young woman, with long white hands and quick, like movements, and with a certain frank simplicity of manner which suggested that she did not live the cribbed and narrow life usual with the women of the middle classes. The very straightforward spontaneity of her welcome to this stranger was what one would have expected of a man, rather than of a young woman.

But the freshness, the unexpectedness of this was only another charm in the dazzled eyes of George Lewellyn. He found his heart beating faster, his torque faltering, as he looked at her shyly, and forced himself to make an excuse. It may be noted that his first vague suspicions had melted suddenly in the glow of her beauty and of her gracious, smiling manner.

"I thank you, I don't know how to thank you enough," he stammered, already wavering in his intention of going on "but I really ought not to take advantage of your kindness. The fact is I am traveling with some valuable securities—"

A sort of seldness seized George when he got as far as this, and made him suddenly stop. For as soon as he mentioned the securities he saw a flash of light on his hostess's face. As he paused, she took up his speech for him.

"If you have anything of much value about you, that is all the more reason why you should not stumble about blindly in the snow, as you were doing when I first met you."

And she stepped out quickly from the dining-room into the hall, drew him inside the house by an unexpected movement of a strong arm, and closed the front door behind him before he had recovered from the amazement into which the rapidity and decisiveness of the movements had thrown him.

"Really, I must beg you to let me go on now," said he, in a low voice, as he made a strong effort to pull himself together, and to resist the pressure which he knew she was going to put upon him to stay.

"And I must beg you to be more reasonable, and not to reject the good fortune the gods send, just because it happens to be offered by a stranger."

"I am afraid I must seem ungracious—" said George quickly, as he put his hand upon the handle of the door. But she, laughing rather nervously, turned the big key in the lock, and pulling it out in quite a leisurely manner, thrust it into her pocket, and sprang, almost at one bound, back to the dining-room door.

"If you say no to a woman, you know," she said as she once more invited him, by a gesture, to enter, "she finds some way of circumventing you after all."

CHAPTER II—MAN'S REVENGE. The young man felt himself torn as if by sharp thorns, with keen feelings, of passionate attraction, of repulsion as keen, and by a sense of imminent danger. He followed the girl into the dining-room, holding his bag with a firm hand, and looked at her with an expression which caused the blood to rush to her face, and her eyes to droop suddenly.

The table was between them, for she was standing by the fireplace at the opposite end of the room, leaning against the mantelpiece in an attitude which showed off the lines of her fine figure to undisturbed advantage against the red glow. Her blush, the womanly bend of her head at his look, caused a revulsion of feeling entirely in her favor in the young man. And even as he gazed at her, bending a little forward to get a better view of her face by looking under the hanging oil lamp with its red shade, he saw that her expression of modest shame gave place to one of doubt, and fear. She looked up quickly, and their eyes met.

"Their usefulness at an end." "Dearest," said the successful candidate to his wife, "are there any of those campaign cigars left?" "Yes, there are two boxes and a half left."

"Please tell Bridget to dump them in the ash barrel," New York Press.

EXERCISE AND RUM.

Modern Out-of-Door Sports Making Inroads on Drinking Habits. The temperance people have every reason to encourage athletics, for in their way they are doing a surprising work in the abatement of the drink habit, says the Boston Globe.

An old custom in Germany is that of "morning beer parties." It is going out of fashion in the cities because it conduces to obesity, and the thousands who are envious of success at tennis and other sports requiring agility are obliged to discard it. The chief point among those indulging in competitive athletics is to keep down superfluous adipose.

With this purpose in view the thousands who have taken on the athletic "crack" in country resorts are consumed learning the value of moderation. Voluntary reform such as this outweighs in importance and in good results a hundred drastic schemes to force men to abstain from liquor. It seems clear enough that athletics are becoming a potent adjunct in the good cause of real temperance.

A Kind Mother. From the Woonsocket Reporter. "Tommy Wing's mother is awfully good and kind to him."

Mamma—What has she done that is so thoughtful? "Let him have moogles just the very day school began."

What a Pity! From the Indianapolis Journal. Hungry Higgins—Wot are you studying about now? "Weary Watkins—I was just thinkin' what a pity it is when a feller gets drunk drunk he don't know nothin' about how drunk he is."

Curious Domestic Fact. From Judge. One of the curious facts of domestic life is that a daughter will stand in with her mother to pull lamb's wool over her "pa's" eyes, but once let a father say to his son, "You needn't mention this to your mother," and he may expect to be blackmailed from that on.

CROSS-GRAINED. It's risky and dangerous, soor irritable, so that the whole world seems wrong. That's the way you feel when your liver is inactive. You need Doctoring a powerful agent to stimulate it and correct it, and clear up your system for you. You won't mind the taking of the medicine, so natural in its effects. All that you notice with this is the good that it does.

In the permanent cure of Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Dizziness, Sick or Bloating Headache, and every liver, stomach, or bowel disorder, they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or the money is returned.

Don't tinker at your Catarrh with unknown medicines. It's risky and dangerous. You may drive it to the lungs. Get the Remedy that has cured Catarrh for years and years—Dr. Sugi's Catarrh Remedy. The makers guarantee to cure, or benefit, in the worst case.
