WEST SIDE EVENTS.

Trouble Caused by Sleepy Workmen. They Sounded an Alarm That Brought on Confusion and Other Things.

Three men who work nights about a certain colliery very far from the city line have a tendency to watch with their eyes closed. One is an engineer, another keeps up the fires in the boiler room, the third sees that tramps are run off the place, and all three are supposed to look out for fire at the breaker. Last Thursday night the engineer and fireman were in the engine house. Suddenly the fireman awoke from a profound sleep. He glanced at the clock, "Great Scott," he said, "it's six o'clock." Whereupon he hurried to the dangling rope of the breaker and in an instant the neighborhood was awakened by a prolonged toot which blows every morning at 6 o'clock.

When the engineer heard the going he also awoke with a start and he too glanced mechanically at the clock. "Five o'clock," he yelled, "blow her four times more." So he rushed to the rope and four more toots sounded out upon the night air.

"It's 6 o'clock," said the fireman.

"No, it's 5 o'clock," corrected the engineer.

They both scrambled nearer the big timepiece to prove their assertions, when, shades of confusion! It was but half-past 12. Imagine their feelings when in a few moments the miners gathered around the engine house. A few had prepared to go to work; others thought it was fire. Of the latter the mine foreman was one. He was half-dressed and more than half excited.

"Where's the fire?" he asked hurriedly. The mistake was explained.

There was a row and a little incidental "firing" done. The mine foreman started home. While passing the breaker office he knocked and kicked at the door. A voice with a yawn-like intonation answered him. "The watchman stuck his head out.

"What's the matter?" he asked innocently.

He had not even heard the going.

WILL RELEASE ASSOCIATION.

The West Side Hospital association met last evening. The meeting was taken up with a discussion of the all-important hospital site. Mr. Freeman, the owner of the building on Washburn street, which was objected to by certain residents of the locality, has made a generous offer to the association. He will free them from all contracts with him if the association decides to adopt another location for the hospital. The board at last night's meeting accepted the offer and asked for a period of ten days grace for the purpose of considering the situation. The association, by this action, does not wish it understood that they have renounced the Freeman site. To the contrary, if, after consideration the site is deemed preferable, the hospital will be established there.

GOSSIP OF STAGE FAVORITES.

Paragraphs of News and Comment Concerning the Inhabitants of the Mimic World--Announcements of Coming Attractions--Theatrical Tidings.

Every one who saw "Chimble Fadden" at the Frothingham on last New York night will be ready to agree with the following estimate by Beaumont Fletcher in the April Godeya: "As the dramatist of 'Trilby' made the play deserve the name of 'Chimble Fadden' after the 'Chimble Fadden' almost because 'Mrs. Murphy'—not through the fault of the author, however, but through the fault of the actress, she has taken a small part not vitally connected with any of the scenes, not blessed with any speeches of intrinsic interest, and has made of the character a masterpiece of such irresistible drollery, such amazing versatility, and such fascinating plebeianism, that the audience takes her into its heart of hearts. And she impersonates a bibulous, querulous, scurrilous old Irish woman! From her first appearance at a window over a saloon, whence she lets down a growler with a string, the audience hangs ecstatic on her slightest move. The epicurean waltz she performs in the first act, the bucket before she drinks it, keeps the eyes of the actor beneath; her virtuoso performance of the 'Lullaby' in the second act, and her wailing with false notes, which she pours her tea out into the saucer and shakes it cool; her beautiful, flawless disreputability actually makes the audience's heart beat like a fire-place. When I noted that the latter two acts take place at Mrs. Whiskers' summer home, where surely Mrs. Fadden could not appear, I felt a sense of real bereavement. When she does baffle fate and come out with 'Chimble Fadden' the audience fairly goes crazy. This is a play of such exquisite aggregation; her slightest movement, her least word, is law to the audience. The triumph of this stroke of sheer genius, and the triumph of Mrs. Fadden, an experienced actress whose training began in the old stock company days, and has included a tour of Europe as Topsy in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' five years ago, and a performance in the 'County Fair,' and numberless other roles whose variety has polished her art to perfection. To think for a moment how she has done it, and how she has done it, is to be amazed. To think for a moment how she has done it, and how she has done it, is to be amazed. To think for a moment how she has done it, and how she has done it, is to be amazed.

According to Hilary Bell, Augustin Daily will not allow a husband and wife in his company. Generally considered, marriage is not beneficial to the art of the stage, and when a gifted performer takes to his heels, he usually gives up a large share of her popularity. This is the argument of Mlle. Calve, and it is tolerably correct in logic. Our actress declares that she will never wed no man until she is ready to retire into private life. She is betrothed to M. Cain, author of the libretto of "La Esmeralda," and the subject of our distinguished actress's affection, each to the matrimony or escape from its disasters as soon as possible. Sarah Bernhardt is a widow; so is Eleonora Duse, Melba, and the list is long. Mrs. Fadden, however, is a maiden. Mantel and Bremer are widows. Terina has not yet chosen a husband, and she is a widow. Mrs. Fadden, however, is a maiden. Mantel and Bremer are widows. Terina has not yet chosen a husband, and she is a widow.

Miss Olga Netherole, the English actress, has been known ever since she made her first appearance on the stage as a firm believer in the theory that the author of a play knows more about the business and proper use of the language than any one else. The Chicago Times-Herald. Her opinion underwent a slight change when rehearsing "Carmen." The book calls on the heroine to smoke a cigar. "I think you'd better not try that," Miss Netherole suggested the stage manager.

"Indeed I will," was the reply; "give me a cigar and a match. The author said Carmen was to smoke a cigar, and that's going to be done." Miss Netherole's brother Louis furnished the cigar—a big, black Key West—and the actress lit it.

She took two puffs and her face grew white. She took a third with determination and then dropped the cigar and fled to her dressing-room. There was no more rehearsing that day, and the performance of the star in the evening was not as good as usual.

"Carmen has decided to smoke a cigarette," said Miss Netherole the next day.

Here are the latest examples of London music hall ditties. The song is entitled "It's Great Big Shame." It is the chorus:

It's a great big shame, an' if she belonged to me I'd know who's who. Naggin' at a fellow wot is six-foot-free, an' her not four-foot-two; O! wot a pity 'ad her married not a month or more.

When under an'er fumb goes Jim; 'O! wot a pity 'ad her married not a month or more. Should put up the likes of 'im!

The second example is called "The Fatness of Don Juan," and this is the inspiring chorus:

And every night she goes to bed, I see her come in with a smile; I wonder if she's finkin' of the broken heart she's brought; I feel I ought to be a man, 'cos she won't let me go; I'd give the world to win'er back, my faithful little don.

It takes eight sixty-foot freight cars to carry the scenery costumes and properties of the Irving company. A curious fact came out in the course of the company's dealings with the customhouse, calling, as they did, for exact detailed lists of everything they carried to be put in the plays. It took seventeen closely printed typewritten pages to invoice them, and they footed up a total of $4,406 articles, ranging from the largest "couch" or "bed" scenes, down to a "box of long clay pipes" and a pepper box for "A Story of Waterloo."

Every play is boxed separately, and every article needed for that play kept apart from even the same articles needed for other plays.

"At last," says Footlights, "it has come. The omnipresent high theater, hat is to be legally battered down! We have overlooked the evil, now we begin to see it. The bill of Cincinnati, has introduced a bill in the Ohio legislature making it a misdemeanor to wear a hat in a theater while witnessing a performance. The bill provides a penalty of from $2 to $10. Why women will persist in the idiotic habit of wearing a hat to a place

CEMETERY NOT TO BE SOLD.

A story has been in circulation to the effect that the trustees of the Hickory Street Presbyterian church contemplated the sale of Pittston avenue cemetery and the purchase of a plot in some other place.

The trustees of the cemetery were interviewed and were informed that the report is entirely without foundation. The cemetery is a three-acre tract, occupied, and in view of the location, it was represented that the trustees intended to secure a plot somewhere else and dispose of the present one for building lots.
