THUMB NAIL SKETCHES.

Adjutant General Theodore S. Peck was born in Burlington, Vt., in 1843. At the age of 18 he enlisted in Company F, First Vermont cavalry. He passed all grades of promotion until he finally became a captain and assistant quartermaster. His medal of honor was received for gallant conduct at Newport Barracks, N. C., Feb. 2, 1864. On that day the Union troops, comprising some 750 men with one piece of artillery, were attacked by the confederates under General Johnston, numbering over 5,000 men, accompanied by fourteen pieces of artillery and some cavalry. Lieutenant Peck had command of the right of the division, which was nearest the enemy. The left was the first to reach the Newport river, and after crossing destroyed the railroad bridge, leaving the "county" bridge for the retreat of Peck's command. Lieutenant Peck, having information to fire it after crossing.

He was told that there was turpentine and tar at hand with which to set the bridge afire, and relying on this he allowed the enemy to come up close upon him, making eleven different stands before taking to the bridge. Finally when his men could no longer hold the enemy in check he ordered a retreat across the river and sent men to prepare the bridge for firing. These men returned with the information that there was no tar or turpentine at hand as reported.

To leave the bridge standing meant a capture not only of Peck's command but also of the other wing. Determined that this should not be Lieutenant Peck set a detachment of men at work pulling up dry grass and pulling it over the bridge, and the remainder of his command withstanding a furious onslaught in the meantime. When finally the signal was given that everything was ready, the men dashed across the bridge, applied the torch and held the enemy in check until it was consumed. Before a crossing could be again built the Union men were ten miles down the road.

AFTER THE WAR.

At the close of the war the government offered Captain Peck two commissions, but he declined to accept either. Upon his return home, he was appointed chief of staff at Governor John W. Stewart, and later became colonel of the First and only regiment of infantry of the National Guard of his state.

In 1869 he was elected assistant adjutant general of the Grand Army of the Republic department of Vermont. In 1872, senior vice commander, and 1876-77 department commander. In 1881 he was appointed adjutant general of Vermont. He is a charter member of the Order of the Loyal Legion and a vice president general of the National Society, Sons of American Revolution. He is a charter member of the Vermont Society of Colonial Stars and was its first general.

John Tweeddale is a native of Philadelphia and second vice president of the Union Savings bank of that city. He was born in 1841 and enlisted at the age of 21. He was awarded the medal of honor for gallant action at the battle of Stone River, Tenn., December 31, 1862, and Jan. 1, 1863, being then a private in Company B, 15th Pa. cavalry. After serving in the field until a promotion to sergeant, he was detailed for clerical duty at headquarters, and after a time was made chief clerk of the Department of the Cumberland headquarters. After the war he was appointed to a clerkship in the war department, and by his ability won gradual promotion until he finally became chief clerk of the war department. He was retained through three administrations and only relinquished his position to take up law which he had been studying and in which he was graduated from Columbia Law school, Washington, D. C. Mr. Tweeddale is a fine educationist and prominent in the literary circles of his home city.

Captain Edward L. Gilligan was born in Philadelphia, April 18, 1845, and enlisted October 22, 1861. He re-enlisted at Culpeper, Va., Feb. 1863, when he was promoted to first lieutenant. In 1864 he was made a captain. He participated in twenty-four engagements and was wounded at Stony Creek, March 21, 1865. Captain Gilligan's decoration is due to the capture of a flag at Gettysburg and brave conduct at the attack on the Weldon railroad in 1861, when he lay along the roadside feigning death and counting the enemy while which was charging his command in the rear. The knowledge thus gained led to the ambuscade and repulsing of the enemy.

LIEUTENANT M'KOWN.

Lieutenant Nathaniel A. McKown, of Tunkhannock, was one of the gallant eleven who held Hoke's brigade and Pickett's entire division at bay for several hours at Bachlors Creek, near Newbern, N. C., from capture. He was decorated, particularly for the action noted as follows in the Army and Navy Journal, of Aug. 29, 1864:

"Sergeant Nathaniel A. McKown, of Company B, 5th Pa. infantry, advanced in front of our lines after the repulse of the enemy, capturing a Confederate battle flag under a severe picket fire. He is recommended to the secretary of War for a medal of honor. Sergeant McKown is promoted for good conduct to lieutenant in the Sixth United States Colored Troops." Lieutenant McKown did not accept this commission until continued with the Fifty-eighth until mustered out in 1866.

The incident of the capture of the flag occurred at Fort Harrison. The Confederates had made two unsuccessful assaults. After the second repulse McKown's Company led the charge, going down about forty rods from the Union lines. Despite the advice of his comrades he crowded over the dead and wounded lying between the two lines, secured the flag and brought it back in safety. General Butler upon receiving the captured flag and hearing the story of McKown's bravery made the recommendation and promotion quoted above.

Lieutenant McKown is a native of Susquehanna county and is 53 years of age.

A LACKAWANNA BOY.

Captain John C. Delaney, of Harrisburg, who enlisted here when a mere boy, won his medal for bravery at Dabney Mills, Va., on Feb. 6, 1865, by going between the lines and rescuing wounded comrades. Captain A. H. Mitchell, also of Harrisburg, was decorated during the desperate charge when the rebel lines were broken at Spottsylvania.

First Lieutenant James R. Durham, of Washington, D. C., the quartermaster of the Legion, minus several fingers that he lost in fighting his country. He received the medal of honor for bravery in action on June 14, 1863, during the battle of Winchester. Lieutenant Durham was in command of a skirmishing party. They lay behind a stone wall several hours, not daring to cross it or show their heads above it, as it was certain death. The confederates were behind another stone wall about one hundred yards distant. Three of company E were killed while the line was held in position. They were at last ordered over the wall and the gallant lieutenant, cheering the boys on, was the first one over.

They advanced about thirty yards, the bullets flying thick and fast on all sides. They continued to advance when the lieutenant was struck in the right hand and six or seven of his men were also wounded. Two advanced so far as to surrender, fearing to retreat. The lieutenant here found that the line had been taken entirely behind the stone walls and that he and his men were far in advance of it. He ordered his men back, taking the wounded with them. His right hand and forearm was severely shattered. The lieutenant participated in eighteen battles and skirmishes, conducting himself gallantly, and received a brevet captain's commission, and a medal from his own state.

THE FIRST REBEL FLAG.

General J. Madison Drake, of Elizabeth, N. J., raised the first company of volunteers in New Jersey under President Lincoln's first call for 75,000 men, and served in the three months campaign as ensign of the Third New Jersey regiment. He unfurled the first Union flag on rebel soil, on the night of May 24, 1861, when the army crossed the Long Bridge into Virginia. Re-enlisting in what became the famous Ninth New Jersey riflemen, General Drake served with that command until April 13, 1865. In May, 1864, young Drake, at that time a lieutenant in command of a company, led the army of the James from Bermuda Hundred to Point of Rocks, and a few days later he and his company led the advance against Drewry's Bluff, gallantly driving the confederates behind their works. In the terrible onslaught which Beauregard made against the weak Union line on the morning of May 16, Lieutenant Drake and his command, who had failed to retire with the regiment, on account of the fog,

AMUSING INCIDENTS IN VON STORCH CASE

Ex-Attorney General Palmer and Ex-Judge Harding as Witnesses.

THEY PROVOKE MUCH LAUGHTER

Former White a Witness Tells Major Warren to State His Objection. Judge Harding Interrupts the Proceedings While He Has a Good Look at a Document He Had an Interest in -- Lively Wrangling Among the Attorneys.

But little headway was made in the Von Storch ejection case yesterday owing to the almost constant wrangling over technicalities among the ten attorneys engaged in the case.

The first witness called was A. B. Dunning, Jr., who identified a map of the premises in dispute. The defendant at this juncture made a demand for a certain sheriff's deed of transfer from the plaintiff's attorneys. The latter denied all knowledge of any such instrument. The defendant's attorneys thereupon asked for an attachment to bring the plaintiff, William Von Storch, into court, but when Dr. J. K. Bentley took the stand and testified that Mr. Von Storch was too ill to leave his bed, Judge Archibald declined to issue the attachment. Permission, however, was given to take the sick man's testimony at his home.

Ex-Judge Garrick M. Harding, of Wilkes-Barre, was on the stand all afternoon, and will be called again this morning for cross-examination. Judge Harding was the law partner of Henry M. Fuller, who it will be remembered from yesterday's story, was mixed up in nearly all the legal transactions concerning the estate.

It was proposed to show by Judge Harding that when Attorney Fuller purchased the property in dispute at sheriff's sale he was acting for Ferdinand and Von Storch; that he held the property in trust for Ferdinand, and consequently a title derived from him is not regular.

In 1885, the Zouaves made a tour of the American continent, being absent from New Jersey over a month, and six years ago General Drake and his Zouaves made a tour of the Southern states, New Orleans being the objective point. General Drake has been a newspaper publisher for forty-two years, and is still in the harness.

ENTITLED TO FOUR.

One of the most interesting members of the Legion is Major Moses Veale, of Philadelphia, who is a member of the bar of that county and was health officer of the city for a number of years. He was wounded five times during the war and had two horses shot from under him. He won his medal by an act of bravery at Wauhatchie, Tenn., in planting cannon which kept the rebel back and probably saved the lives of a large number of the fourteen hundred men in his command. He was wounded in the shoulder while planting the cannon but refused to leave the field until the engagement was over. This fight occurred at the foot of Lookout mountain.

Later during the war he was shot through the lung at Pine Knob while in front of the Union lines trying to ascertain the number of the enemy and the proposed movement. He was supposed to be fatally wounded and was carried to the hospital in the rear of the lines by ex-Chief of Police Simpson and William Gardner, of the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Pennsylvania volunteers. Major Veale was entitled to a medal for four different acts of heroism, but the one at the foot of Lookout mountain is the one for which the distinction was awarded.

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT.

One of the interesting incidents that occurred last night at the reception the meeting of Patrick H. Doody, of Winton, who served together in the Irish Legion, but have not met since the war. Doody was only a private, but he was selected for the hazardous work of ascertaining the position of the enemy's line at Cold Harbor on June 7, 1864. He afterwards led the skirmishers out and captured the rebel rifle pits and wound up the day's work by sending to his eternal reward a rebel sharpshooter who was picking off the Union skirmishers in the rifle pits.

Before Petersburg a few days later his name was read on the roll of honor, and later the medal was conferred upon him by congress.

Simultaneously with the order of removal of Beckett a communication was sent to the Eagle company informing it of Mayor Bailey's action and instructing the members to name another man for the position.

The company will meet to-night and action will probably be taken.
