TRYING ORDEALS FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. Pinkham Tells How Women May Avoid Painful Examinations.

To a modest, sensitive, high-strung young woman, especially one more trying or painful ordeal than the "examinations," which are now so common in hospitals and private practice.

An examination by speculum, or otherwise, is sometimes a positive necessity in certain stages of many diseases peculiar to women, so at least it is declared by the profession. This would not be the case if patients heeded their symptoms in time.

If a young girl's blood is watery, her skin pale and waxy looking, her lips colorless, bowels torpid, digestion poor, her ears and temples hot and she is subject to headache, begin at once to build up her system with Dr. E. B. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Do not allow her to undergo a physical examination.

Here is a letter from a young lady who requests that her name should not be used, but gives her initials and street number so that any inquiry addressed to her will be received. She says: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—It affords me great pleasure to be able to say a few words in regard to the merits of your Vegetable Compound. I was tempted to try it after seeing the effects of it upon my mother, and now I feel like a new person. I am a stenographer and was troubled with falling of the womb and female weakness in general. I continued to work until I was so weak I could no longer walk, and the last day I was forced to stop and rest."

"I was then so ill that I was compelled to stay in bed and so nervous that I could not hold anything in my hands. The least noise or surprise could hardly stand. I suffered for almost a year. It is different now. I can go about my work with pleasure, while before, work was a drudge. "Trusting that my words of praise may help some other afflicted person, and be of benefit to womankind in general, I remain, Yours in gratitude, L. H., 444 S. East St., Indianapolis, Ind."

CLOTHING VIEWED BY SCIENCE'S EYE

What We Should Wear from a Sanitary Standpoint.

VEGETABLE FIBRE IS NO GOOD

The Proper Kind of Clothing Is Made of Animal Fibre, or in Other Words, Is Woolen—Even the Bedclothes Should Be of Wool—Reasons Why.

Writing in the New Review L. R. S. Tomalin says: "The question whether animal or vegetable fibre is more suitable for covering the body can only be answered by considering the physiological effect of such fibres upon the body and its functions. One of the most important of these functions is that performed by the skin in perspiring or throwing off from the body, through its pores, by the medium of a watery vapor, refuse matters, which, if retained in the body, would be highly injurious. This function is as vital and important, and its proper performance at all times is as conducive to health as the normal discharge by the kidneys and other excretory organs of their functions. Now, if the skin receives a chill its functional activity is greatly interfered with or altogether arrested. The surface blood vessels to the internal organs, where congestion and inflammation may be set up. In short, a chilled skin cannot sweat, cannot even exhale—a fact which is quite inadequate degrees—and the injurious refuse matter which should have been thrown off is retained in the body.

Now we see the importance of covering the skin not with vegetable fibre, but with that which rapidly conducts the heat from it, but with animal fibre, which on the human body is a slow heat conductor. The former covering involves the risk of cooling too quickly, of losing not only the superfluous heat, but also the degree of heat which is necessary to enable the skin to perform its exhaling function properly. Again, one of the things not generally considered is that evil odors have an injurious effect upon the skin's action, tending to drive away the blood from the surface vessels. An impure atmosphere is not only unwholesome when inhaled by the lungs, but also when the body is surrounded by its own emanations. Dead vegetable fibre (such as linen and cotton) is hygrophagous, i. e., it greedily takes up the malarious emanations of the body, although it cannot, as the living plant would do, assimilate them. This the merest tyro in experiment can test by noting the odor of cotton waist-coats and trousers pockets after a few weeks' (or a few days') wear, and comparing with the odor of woolen materials under similar conditions. Another sense—that of touch—will show the superiority of animal fibre as clothing material. Put the hand on wool and you will feel attracted; put it on linen or cotton and you feel repelled.

The hygroscopical difference between wool and linen or cotton is important. Vegetable fibre really takes up moisture like a sponge, while the horny nature of wool offers much greater resistance to saturation with wet. If we remember that all these advantageous attributes of animal fibre slow heat conductivity, non-absorption of evil odors, non-saturation with wet, and the development of utmost energy and vigor.

The secret of healthy clothing is porous wool throughout. All wool, porous wool, and as few layers of it as practicable, to allow the freest vent to the skin's exhaled vapor—that is the safe system, and it is no fact, but simple, plain common sense. Before quitting the subject of health in connection with the body's covering, the nightwear and bedclothing should be mentioned. The important exhaling function of the skin at night, continues uninterrupted through the hours of rest, when the brain no longer acts as the body's sentinel, and the sleeper is peculiarly exposed to unwholesome influences, if such there be. Cotton and linen are at least as objectionable at night as during the day, and the ordinary bedding—even of well-to-do people—is a storehouse of the body's emanations. The comfort and the invigorating sleep to be gained by sleeping with an open window, in woolen night-clothing and between cool coverings, with no cotton counterpane or quilt, are unimagined by those who have not tried it. In the hottest days of summer, a light, porous woolen covering is much cooler, more comfortable, and far safer than a linen sheet.

THE DEAD MAN HIT HIM.

So He Ran Home, Confessed and Gave Up the Ghost.

La Manana, a daily paper published in Coruna, Spain, relates a peculiar occurrence, which is vouched for by the local authorities of the village of Ben, not far from there. Some time ago a German seaman, from Bremen, foundered off that coast, and from time to time bodies of some of the victims of the disaster were washed ashore. An inhabitant of the village recently saw a body brought in by the tide, and he immediately took it to the body up on dry land. The first thing he did after landing the body was to seek in the pockets of the drowned sailor for the valuables he thought he might find. The right arm of the corpse was then stretched out stiffly, and as the villager searched the vest pockets of the deceased he must have exerted some pressure upon the muscles of the breast, for as he did so the arm of the dead man suddenly swung back and hit him squarely in the face.

The fellow jumped up, scared to death, and ran home as fast as his legs could carry him. He went to bed in the greatest excitement; and, after confessing to a priest, who was quickly called, he had attempted to rob a corpse and had been struck a blow by the same, he died the same day. This story is given by the Spanish paper as absolutely true, excepting only the natural explanation of how the arm of the corpse could be swung around when the breast was compressed.

RAPID SHOEMAKING.

From Scribner's. One of the big Lynn shoe shops made a pair of ladies' boots for the Paris exhibition of 1889 in twenty-four minutes. A notable feat in the shoe-making industry. For this feat the pair of shoes went through the usual routine of the shop, but at exceptional speed; fifty-seven different operators and forty-two machines were concerned in the work, which required twenty-six pieces of leather, fourteen pieces of cloth, twenty-four buttons, twenty-four buttons, two box toes, two side flaps and twenty yards of thread. Since that time the division of labor and there is a larger amount of machinery employed, with the result that a pair of shoes can now be made complete in this factory in less than twenty minutes.

For Ladies Only.

It is patent to all thinking people that ladies require on account of their peculiar organism and functions remedies quite different from the sterner sex. While the FEMININE LIVER PILLS act directly and pleasantly upon the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Bowels, at the same time wonderfully regulate and strengthen the functions and organs peculiar to the sex, they also relieve Constipation, Headache, Dizziness
