"MABON" WILL COME TODAY

WELSH LABOR LEADER TO PAY SCRANTON A VISIT.

Is to Be the Guest of Hon. H. M. Edwards—Hon. William Abraham Is a Member of Parliament and President of the Welsh Miners' Federation, Which Has a Total Membership of 133,000 Mine Workers—Is to Lecture Tonight on "A Night in Parliament."

Hon. William Abraham, member of parliament and Welsh labor leader, will arrive in the city today and be the guest of Hon. H. M. Edwards at the latter's home on South Main avenue. Mr. Abraham is familiarly known by his countrymen as "Mabon" and is making a tour of the country investigating the labor and industrial conditions.

He is also doing some lecturing, and in Meigs' hall tonight he will speak on "A Night in the House of Commons." The lecture will begin at 8 p. m.

Mr. Abraham landed at Montreal one month ago. After a brief stay there, he went to Chicago, then to Youngstown, Pittsburg, Johnstown and Wilkes-Barre, spending several days in each city making a study of the industrial conditions in each. He has a thorough knowledge of mining in all its details. He started to work in the mines when he was not quite ten years old and filled every position from the lowest to the most important. He became a leader among his fellow workers and has been a pronounced miners' leader since 1876.

In 1881, through a long, hard fight of the Liberals, the franchise laws were changed and Great Britain was re-elected to the general election district, giving the laboring classes greater opportunity of electing members of parliament. In 1885 Mr. Abraham became the labor candidate for member of parliament and was elected by a good-sized majority from the district including the Rhondda valleys of Wales, and he has continued to represent that district ever since.

BY A LARGE MAJORITY.

Last year he was re-elected by the largest majority of any member in the United Kingdom. He has made a fine record in the house of parliament and he is the only labor member from Wales who is being paid a salary by the labor organization of Great Britain for his services in their interests. He has also for years been the president of the Welsh Miners' Federation, representing a total membership of 133,000 mine workers.

Next year a change is expected in the system of regulating miners' wages, hours of work, etc., and he came to America chiefly to study the system in vogue here and to ascertain whether or not it contains anything that would benefit the miners of Great Britain. The information he is gaining will be of value to him in the labor convention that is to be held next year in Great Britain.

Mr. Abraham is better known in his own country by the appellation of "Mabon" than by his own name. The meaning of "Mabon" is "son of his country." The title was given him for his cleverness as a poet and singer, and it is well applied in this case. Among the laboring classes he is highly respected for his steady and unswerving labor for the good and betterment of his fellow-workers. The miners in 1888 honored him by naming a holiday after him, calling it "Mabon's Monday," being the first Monday in each calendar month.

"MABON'S MONDAY."

On every "Mabon's Monday" the miners get together and discuss union matters and adjust what difficulties exist, and the day is observed as a holiday. The owners of the collieries alike welcome this day, as it gives them a chance to make repairs to property, machinery and so on, without having their employees labor on the Sabbath. There is also a Labor Day in Great Britain, which always falls on the first Monday in May, and is generally observed by all trades throughout the United Kingdom.

For his education, spiritual and otherwise, Mr. Abraham gives credit to the Sunday school and the church.

"Mabon" is astonished at the advance of America's industries and the extent, resources and development of our country. In the States he has so far visited, among other industries, he inspected the great steel works, which he says are the most stupendous and marvellous in the world. The massive steel plants of the United States are of great interest to the workman of Great Britain in general, as these plants can turn out more and better material in less time and with less men than any other country on the globe. He says that so far on his brief visit here he has realized that it is more a question of capital than of quantity of labor.

VISITED SOFT COAL MINES.

"Mabon" also visited a number of mines in the bituminous coal fields and closely inspected them. He is unable to say whether or not the wage earners of America were better paid than those in England, but thinks that they were about equally paid for their labor. He says the United States impresses one as a country of endless length, wealth, industries and progressiveness; a country enjoying a flood of prosperity and being tenanted by people who still not in hospital.

Besides inspecting the steel and mining industries of America, he also intends to visit the slate quarries and cement mills in Lehigh and Northampton counties, this state, where he has business interests. He was more than surprised in the soft coal region mines, where no horses or mules were used as a means of locomotion, as he is customary in England. He says there was a complete absence of these animals and in their place all the work is done by electricity. It seemed to him as though he had bounded ahead a century from the one he had been living in, so marked was the transformation. Americans do not fully realize the industrial greatness of this country, is his belief.

Mr. Abraham intended to get back to Wales in time to spend Christmas at home, but the task he has undertaken and the United States is much larger than he anticipated, and he does not expect to reach home until the latter part of January.

While visiting the board of trade at Chicago, he met a fellow member of parliament, Sir Francis Christopher, who is at the head of a large ship-building syndicate and other extensive works. He, too, came to America to study the industrial and labor conditions.

CATHOLIC HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Papers Read by W. F. Shean and Miss Mary Walsh.

Attorney W. F. Shean, editor of the Catholic Light, read a paper at last night's meeting of the Catholic Historical society on "The Catholic Church as the Patron of the Arts and the Sciences," that revealed his very wide scholarship and devotion to his religious belief.

Mr. Shean refuted the charges of those historians who refer with scorn to medieval times and term them "the dark ages." "The history of the so-called dark ages in reality," said he, "forms some of the brightest pages in the history of the world. They were a civilization formed." He traced at length the fostering care which, he said, the Catholic church has always thrown around the great arts and sciences, such as painting, sculpture, literature, astronomy, chemistry, and others.

A paper, giving a brief sketch of the life of Cardinal John Newman, the greatest of modern stylists, was read by Miss Mary Walsh. The social hour was taken up with an enjoyable informal euchre party.

STEPPED IN FRONT OF A TROLLEY CAR

Miss Esther Rowlands Frighfully Injured at Madison Avenue and Olive Street Yesterday.

Miss Esther Rowlands, sister of Miss W. H. McLaughlin, prominent Young Women's Christian association worker, was run down by a street car on Madison avenue yesterday, shortly after noon, and sustained injuries which may result fatally. Her escape from death was almost miraculous.

Miss Rowlands was returning home from her employment at Connolly & Wallace's store and rode on a Laurel Hill car. The car was stopped at the corner of Madison avenue and Olive street, in response to her signal, and Miss Rowlands came out on the rear platform to alight.

The gate on the side of the car next the down track, which is ordinarily closed, was open and Miss Rowlands stepped off the car on that side and right in front of the Laurel Hill car, which was coming down.

Before the motorman of this car could stop, she was struck by the fender and instead of being caught by it, was thrown forward on the track. The fender passed over her and she would have gone under the wheels had it not been for the board which is in front of them, a few inches from the rail.

The motorman became excited and before he was able to stop the car the unfortunate woman had been pushed upwards of twenty feet, but she being held close to the pavement by the fender. When the car was finally stopped she was lifted out by several of the horrified witnesses of the accident and was carried, still unconscious, into the home of her sister, on the corner of Olive street, where she is now lying under the care of Dr. H. D. Gardner, who lives nearby and was hurriedly summoned. He found that Miss Rowlands had sustained a serious compound fracture of the right ankle, the bones being crushed to small fragments. In addition to this, there were several severe scalp wounds on the head and lacerations of the face, besides severe bruises and possibly internal injuries. Dr. William Rowland Davies, a nephew of the injured woman, also attended her.

The physicians had not decided last night as to whether the injured woman's foot will have to be amputated. There is strong reason to believe that this will be necessary, however. They say that her condition is critical on account of the seriousness of the internal injuries.

The motorman was so nervous after the experience that he had to be laid off for the rest of the day. He was too excited when he reached the office to give a satisfactory account of the affair.

The injured woman was for some time the secretary of the South Side branch of the Young Women's Christian association, and had recently accepted a responsible position with Connolly & Wallace. Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin were in Washington yesterday, but started for home upon hearing of the accident.

DR. ABBOTT ON THE HOME

SPOKE LAST NIGHT IN THE LYCEUM THEATER.

There is No Place So Sacred as the Home, and It is Rightly Loved Above Church and Country—The Home Has Real, Active Enemies, and the Greatest of These is Divorce—Marriage is Not a Civil Contract and It Cannot Be Dissolved at Will of Parties.

Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D., the pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church and editor of the Outlook, delivered a lecture in the Lyceum last night on "Homes." The lecture was for the benefit of the Congregational church of Carbondale. Dr. Abbott having given his services without price to aid the movement to reduce the debt which now encumbers that church.

The distinguished speaker was introduced by Rev. Thomas F. May, pastor of the Carbondale church, who said that when death removed the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, the greatest pulpit orator of his time and who for forty years filled the pulpit of the Plymouth Congregational church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and it was necessary to find a successor to him, that successor was discovered in the person of Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D. "It is with reverential gratitude and pleasure," concluded the speaker, "that I introduce the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott."

Dr. Abbott is a tall, spare man with the face of a thinker, partially concealed by a beard rapidly becoming white. He is a very bald man, with a highly developed forehead. His hair, like his whiskers, is nearly white and is worn long, falling to the collar. Dr. Abbott is not a theatrical speaker. His gestures are few and unstudied, but there is a power and force to his words and an aptness of illustration which drive home the truth of his words and leave a conviction to those who hear him. His theme last night was "The Home," was illumined by little side lights of humor and pathos, which were delightfully interwoven into the more serious part of his discourse.

WHAT THE HOME IS.

In opening his address, Dr. Abbott said: "I am here to talk to you for a little while tonight on 'The Home.' All of our lives receive their inspirations from the home. It is in the home we learn many of the lessons that have a good or evil effect on our lives. The home is the sacred foundation of life, and it has its enemies, and real, bitter enemies they are."

He referred eloquently to the chief enemies of the home, and said it was appalling to think that in staid old New England there is one divorce to every ten marriages and these figures, he said, do not tell of all the marital infidelity and unhappiness that exist. "I find the standard and every thing was keyed to that point of view, and when the higher education was broached it was asked, would it make her a better wife. Against the idea that education is merely to make woman a higher servant or parlor ornament for man, I cannot weigh too strongly. The idea of education is to make a better woman, and the better woman she is the better wife and mother she will be."

"The highest duty a woman can be called to is the married estate, but she should not be educated for that end any more than a man should be educated to become a husband, and that is the highest office he can be called to fill. Woman makes a mistake when she takes man as the standard and tries to do everything he does. Man is not the standard for woman, and the woman who tries to imitate him is leaving the higher for the lower service."

Referring to the necessity for women being common as the standard and arena of life to earn their living, Dr. Abbott said:

SALOON AN ENEMY.

"The saloon is another enemy of the home. When I read in the newspapers that the saloon is the poor man's club, I wonder where the poor woman's club is. I find the saloon because it is the poor man's club and draws him from the home where he ought to be."

"A certain false and new conception of the place of women in society is another enemy. The old notion was that woman was made for man and everything was keyed to that point of view, and when the higher education was broached it was asked, would it make her a better wife. Against the idea that education is merely to make woman a higher servant or parlor ornament for man, I cannot weigh too strongly. The idea of education is to make a better woman, and the better woman she is the better wife and mother she will be."

"The highest duty a woman can be called to is the married estate, but she should not be educated for that end any more than a man should be educated to become a husband, and that is the highest office he can be called to fill. Woman makes a mistake when she takes man as the standard and tries to do everything he does. Man is not the standard for woman, and the woman who tries to imitate him is leaving the higher for the lower service."

Referring to the necessity for women being common as the standard and arena of life to earn their living, Dr. Abbott said:

CONDITIONS WRONG.

"I do not like the industrial conditions that puts children to work in the mines and compels women to earn their own living. Man ought to be able to do it."

Dr. Abbott said he believes in a tax on bachelors, to begin when they are twenty-five and to be increased every year. He said bachelors ought to support the orphan and the aged.

"Marry early," was the speaker's advice. "Get a home and begin life together. Take a lesson from the birds. Mate first and build your nest afterwards. The second enemy of the home is in large cities, and the tendency of the times is to rush into the congested centers of population. Big hotels and the modern tenement, called an apartment house, do not constitute a real home. The true home is in the country or at least in the suburbs, where one can have his own roof over his head, fresh air to breathe and room for the children to play."

A FALSE CONCEPTION.

"The third enemy of the home is the false conception of the family relation. The Roman Catholic church, with an instinctive wisdom, placed itself at the gateway of life and made marriage a sacrament to be administered only by its clergy. The Protestant religion, anxious to get away from this, rushed to the other extreme and said co-equal parties enter into a co-equal partnership, and consequently made way for the natural argument that the contract may be dissolved, as any other civil contract, at the pleasure of the parties.

"I deny that marriage is a civil contract; I deny that the parties to it are co-equal partners, and I deny that it can be dissolved."

He dwelt upon the laxity of the marriage relation that followed in the train of the civil marriages in Rome, mentioning one Roman woman who became a wife for the twenty-third time, and who, he said, the twenty-fourth time her husband had taken to his arms.

"God made man and woman to be united," resumed the speaker. "It is vital, it is fundamental that it should be so. This is not of man's making, but of God's. All other forms of organization have changed or passed away."

but the thing that has not changed is the union of one man to one woman until death do them part. This divine arrangement is not a civil marriage. It is not a commercial transaction in any sense of the word.

GOD'S ETHERAL LAW.

"The eternal law of God is that the man is the head of the household and not the woman. I know this is not a popular thing to say at this time, but it is God's eternal law. This does not mean that the man is superior. Headship is not superiority. The president of the United States is the head of the government, but he is not always the most superior man in the country. There cannot be two heads to the family for a two-headed thing is a monstrosity; whether it be a two-headed calf or a two-headed family. Somewhere there must be authority. In a two-headed family you have two families growing farther and farther apart as the years go by, each the head of each struggling for supremacy."

"St. Paul was a wise man. He said: 'Husbands, love your wives; wives, obey your husband.' I have a word of practical advice to women. Never marry a man unless you respect him enough to acknowledge him as the head. Don't marry him because he dances well and gives you flowers and takes you to the opera. Don't marry him to reform him. Don't marry him unless you can look up to him."

He referred eloquently to the great sacrifice a woman makes when she gives herself to man in marriage and sinks her identity in his, and told the man to bring home to themselves a realization of this more forcibly than they do. He passed from this to a consideration of the trivial reasons for which divorces are granted in many states, and resuming the thread of his discourse, said: "Marriage is God's holy estate. It is his law that one man and one woman be joined together for life. This is the divine law, and where ever it is violated the effect is pernicious to the family, pernicious to society, pernicious to the church and pernicious to the state."

Editor of the Tribune—

Sir: In your column of today Mr. William is quoted in an interview as saying it is in the power of the business men to put an end to the strike if at any time they must sufficient courage to patronize the street cars. Has it ever occurred to Mr. Silliman that the service to which the public has been accustomed for years under his management has been inferior to that furnished by the bus lines that New York city furnished his travelers no heated comfort. And Silliman says, "Patronize the cars."
