FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE.
 An Expert's Statement of Its Symptoms and Effects.
 Dr. Salmon, in Public Health.
 Foot and mouth disease appears among cattle as a high fever with vesicles on the inside of the lips, tongue, cheeks and roof of the mouth, and also upon the feet, just above the horn and between the toes. These vesicles soon rupture and leave an ulcerated surface which interferes with eating and causes more or less lameness. Few animals die, but the fever causes the suspension of the milk secretion and a great loss of flesh. It is estimated that animals lose fifty per cent. in value by an attack.
 The most marked characteristics of the disease are that nearly every bovine animal exposed contracts the disease, and the contagion spreads with most remarkable rapidity, and is easily carried from place to place by people, dogs, and other animals, or infected cars. It affects hogs, sheep, goats and other ruminants and possibly also horses to a slight extent.
 The milk of affected cows is infectious and liable to convey the disease to children and others partaking of it. The great loss on account of the disease is not from its fatality, but from the loss of milk and flesh, and as the shrinkage in this way equals half the value of the animals the disease is, as you can see, as bad as those plagues where only half the animals are affected, but where practically all the affected ones die.
 I do not know how the contagion was introduced, as it did not come through our quarantine stations. The existence of the contagion in this country is a great calamity, and threatens our whole live stock industry. The federal government will do everything practicable to confine the disease and stamp it out.

MANILA IN THE YEAR 1902.
 Features at Present of the Metropolis of the Philippines.
 From the Manila Justice.
 Manila has a population of some 300,000 people, divided as follows: Natives, 250,000; Chinese, 60,000; and others, principally Americans, 90,000. It is a beautiful old-fashioned city, built upon the northeastern shore of the bay, which is nearly round and about twenty-five miles across. The houses are principally built of manufactured stone and are one, two and three-story structures. The walls are from two to four feet thick and built to withstand the earthquakes, and do that is, the less severe ones. The streets are tolerably straight and from thirty to sixty feet wide, with the majority of them about thirty-five feet.
 The city is lighted very poorly with electric lights. There is a street car line, the cars being of the small, open kind. The telephone system is poor. Manila has a very good waterworks system, presented to the municipality by the Filipino who has departed this life, the condition of the gift being that the poor people should always have water free, and public hydrants are provided for every street.
 The Pasig River courses through the city from the northeast to the southwest. Below the first bridge, above the mouth of the river, at the famous "Bridge of Spain," the river is wide and deep and is constantly crowded with commerce and boats of all descriptions. It is a sight worth a long journey to see.
 The churches and cathedrals are a marked feature of Manila. Their grandeur, and in many instances elegance, is a wonder and surprise to the stranger. And the bells, the "beautiful bells," the devotion of the people to their music festivals. These who do not like them think they are "awful." On feast days, and here are many, business in the immediate vicinity of a church has at times to be suspended during their ringing, and that is many times during the day, and it is not unusual for them to be heard at midnight, and they always mingle with the voices of a myriad of cocks
