

Servant Girl Too Much Job For Powderly

Plan to Furnish Homes With Domestic Abandoned After Trial.

At last, Uncle Sam has recognized there is one thing that is too big for him to tackle. He feels competent to bluff Venezuela, lick Japan, or regulate the railroads and the corporations. He can even make the Kaiser accept an ambassador against his will. But it has been reserved for the servant girl problem to floor him completely.

Last year, the division of information of the Bureau of Immigration was organized in the Department of Commerce and Labor. Terence V. Powderly, former head of the Knights of Labor, was put at its head. Mr. Powderly has had many years of experience with the various labor problems before the country and probably ought to have known better than to become tangled up with the problem of supplying the land with servant girls.

At any rate, he ventured into this field of endeavor in a rash and misguided moment and speedily became sorry he had done it.

Learns Lesson.

Mr. Powderly has learned now that what the housewives of the United States have never come within a thousand miles of solving there is not much use for a paternal government to try to solve.

When the division of information first set to work, inquiries were sent out to State and local authorities asking what help was needed. Private parties were also encouraged to advise the division as to what help they wanted. Straightway there came pouring in through the mails, along with a heavy demand for male labor, a flood of calls for servant girls. From Maine to California the cry went up that servant girls were needed, and widespread publicity was given to the fact that the Government had at last taken steps to supply domestic help.

Roseate pictures were painted telling how all a woman who wanted a servant girl had to do was to write Mr. Powderly and one would be sent her when the next ship load of immigrants arrived at New York.

All this is changed now. The Government has quit trying to supply servant girls. The division of information found itself swamped beneath an avalanche of demands for female help. It could not begin to meet these demands. After trying the job in vain for months, Mr. Powderly and his aides gave it up in despair and discouragement. They found it impossible to get young women who come over from Europe willing to work as domestics in New York.

For instance, they found that the demand for servant girls there was so great as practically to consume the enormous supply of young women who come to this country willing to work as servants. It was found that any fairly competent young woman, even if unable to speak English, could secure work as a domestic in New York almost as soon as she landed.

Women Support Families.

It was found that the demand for domestics in the large cities is so great that many women support large families by domestic service. It frequently happens that the wages of the wife who is in domestic service are higher than those of her husband. These and other facts discovered by the division of information when they began to get to the real truth about the servant-girl problem convinced the officials of the utter uselessness of trying to cope with the situation. There are not enough servant girls to go around, and that's all there is to it, and even the strongest arm of the Government can't help these conditions.

In a Good Cause

Helen, who is but three years old, is devoted to her building blocks. Her mother has told her that they are not to be used on the Sabbath. One Sunday recently Helen was discovered enjoying herself with the attractive playthings.

"Why, baby, don't you know you should not play with your blocks on the Sabbath?" said her mother.

"But mamma, the quick reply, 'this is all right—I am building Sunday school for my dolls.'—Lippincott's Magazine.

Miss Florence Benjamin Cured by Viennese Surgeon

Pretty Actress Had Stroke of Paralysis After Fall in Theater.

Wore Headgear and Arm and Ankle Brace All Summer.

Florence Benjamin, one of the bright girls appearing at the Majestic Theater this week, came very near being a helplessly invalid for life instead of pursuing a stage career, and it was owing to the skill of Dr. Lorenz, the famous Viennese surgeon, that Miss Benjamin is well today.

In 1903 Miss Benjamin was in the Klav & Erlanger company presenting "The Beauty and the Beast." She was quite young and had considerable talent. At the conclusion of a scene one night Miss Benjamin backed off the stage and, miscalculating her position, struck a large electric light stand. She felt no unusual pain at the time, but a few days later she collapsed with a paralytic stroke which drew her head down to her left shoulder, which had been struck by the stand, contracted her left arm and drew up her left leg.

Surgeons were consulted, and one and all decided that the little girl's leg must be broken in order to straighten it. It was at this time that Dr. Lorenz was in America attending the little Armour girl, daughter of the Chicago packer. His attention was called to little Miss Benjamin's case, and he instructed her attending physicians not to perform any operation until he had seen the patient.

When Dr. Lorenz called he made an examination, simply said the one word "Easy!" and slipped a harness on the little girl's head, left arm and ankle. The leg was placed in a plaster cast and weights put on the ankle harness. From April until the following September he visited her in the harness and cast. When both were taken off she was as sound and well as she had ever been and today she is the work for her remarkable experience.

Notes of Stage Folks

Miss Ida Conquest, who plays the role of Hilda, in Eugene Walter's drama of "The Wolf" is one of the most popular leading women of the stage. In her career she has been the leading feminine support of such stars as Richard Mansfield, John Drew, and Kyrie Bellew, and was for several seasons leading woman of the Empire Theater Stock Company, New York.

George Marion, who produces and plays in "Going Some" at the Belasco next week, created most of the amusing character types in the old "Wolf" plays.

"The Merry Widow's" popularity has caused music publishers to ship 10,000 copies of the score to Honolulu and Manila.

Charles Frohman has called Marie Doré permission to play "The Morals of Marcus" next season in those cities she could not visit this year because of illness.

her forthcoming reappearance on the London stage.

George Ade will go to London to be present at the English premiere of his comedy satire, "The College Widow," on April 20, at the Adelphi Theater.

The meeziest comment yet made upon his performance of Lemuel Morewood in "Father and the Boys," is that William H. Crane acts like a man who is sixty-three—backwards.

Woman in Bar Association.

The New York State Bar Association has at last admitted to its membership a woman. At its last annual meeting Mrs. Harriette M. Johnson Wood was unanimously elected a member.

Mrs. Wood is the law partner of her husband, and the firm sign reads "Wood & Wood." The New York City Bar Association has persistently refused to admit women lawyers to membership, and not long ago it was said that a move was on foot to alter the constitution in such a manner as to exclude them forever. One of the many reasons assigned for this exclusion is that the presence of women would impose too great a restraint upon the conduct of the men lawyers.

That Tired Feeling Relieved by Bath And Gentle Massage

It is simple enough always to preach the wisdom of refraining from getting tired, but it is more helpful to suggest a few simple remedies when you have already started the mischief.

To begin with the outward appearance. We will suppose a woman, faded and fretted, and overdone, who has to face some family party or social engagement. She naturally wishes to make the best of herself, and to hide the ravages of fatigue, and time. First of all, let her take a warm bath, only staying in it three minutes. Then let her gently massage, rub well her entire body with a soft towel and some massage cream. If she can add to her bath half a pint of milk, or three handfuls of salt, or a handful or two of sulphur or bran, she will feel much more exhilarated. Let her then choose a quiet room in which to rest. Her face should be carefully washed in milk, and then covered with a skin food, which by massage should be completely rubbed into the entire face, especially round the eyes. A glass of hot milk should then be drunk, and sleep will almost inevitably follow.

Before going out the face should be bathed in water, one quart, to which a large tablespoonful of Eau de Cologne has been added. This will give a brightness to the complexion and a tone and vigor to the entire face and figure.

Millinery Novelties

Big black hats promise to be extremely popular.

Gold and silver gauze ribbons can be worn on lace garden hats.

Chrysanthemums, tulips, and dahlias will be popular in hat trimming.

All the new approved French models of hats are worn quite straight on the head.

Porcelain blue is a popular spring shade for hats, stockings, millinery, and even for gloves.

Some of the early hats are charming in their combination of cheerfulness and warmth. A smart little three-cornered arrangement in cream-colored cloth with a knot of brown velvet at one side holds in place a bunch of snowdrops, violets, and a high spray of shaded hyacinth and jonquil.

Pretty blossoms in the many and varied shades of salmon pink or rose, lemon yellow, white, or deeper amber form lovely trimmings to tulle, lace or mousseline de silk hats for restaurant or theater wear. The twigs are hidden beneath the splendor of floral beauty, while a tiny bunch of pale green leaflets here and there stands out from the mass of delicate color.

Pumpkin Pie Recipe

Three pounds of pumpkin, six ounces of butter, six eggs, three tablespoonfuls of wine, two of brandy, the rind and juice of one lemon, as much cinnamon as can be put on a dime.

Cut the pumpkin in slices, pare it, take out the seeds and soft parts, cut it into small pieces, and stew in a small quantity of water until tender. They press and a colander and dry.

Turn it out in a pan, put in the butter and salt and mash fine. When cool whisk the eggs until light and stir in, add sugar to taste, also the brandy, wine, and cinnamon.

This is sufficient for three or four pies. Line the plates with paste and bake in a quick oven.

OLD TURKISH EMBROIDERY REVIVED BY NEW FASHION

With the present-day fashion of using embroidery of all kinds in the trimmings of gowns and the insertion of the heavy laces in the white costumes so much more rather curious use of Oriental embroideries has been revived. For the trimmings of both winter and summer costumes the heavy white Irish crochet lace and the finer variety known as "baby Irish" are always suitable and extremely effective, and the medallions of the heavier laces are much in demand for insertions in waists and linen gowns.

To supply this demand the French modistes, who are always on the lookout for something new, have discovered in the Turkish embroideries or lace, which is made in quantities by both men and women in the bazaars of Constantinople and the East, an excellent substitute for the more expensive Irish crochet.

These laces, which resemble closely the Irish lace, though they are not as elaborate in design or as carefully finished as the real Irish, are hand-made, and more like the thread lace, which is made with a needle, and which is made in many varieties by the peasants of the Continent and elsewhere.

Perhaps the most curious part of this Turkish work is its circular shape, which resembles the round table dolly, and is really made for the purpose of trimming the tops of Turkish trousers worn by both men and women in Constantinople.

These pieces can be bought in any of the bazaars and elsewhere for the extremely moderate sum of two francs a pair, or possibly in a very elaborate design for three or four francs.

Long Gloves in New Designs

As all of the coats for the coming season are fitted with three-quarter sleeves, and almost all dresses have half or even shorter sleeves, the gloves they are made in ways quite different from the product of last year, for then all long gloves were dressy, and now only a few are dressy; the rest are finished on the back with the usual "crow's feet" and fasten over the wrist with a single pearl button, or even a patent clasp.

A new shade is the apricot color, which is of the very lightest brown with a faint shading of pink, and some are of the old-fashioned red-brown, sufficed with red and unadorned. They are so large and so thick that they look quite formidable for warm weather, but there is no doubt that the chamois gauntlets will return in elbow length. They are the coolest of all summer gloves and the easiest to take care of, and last year they were produced in all the usual colors—white, buff, and gray.

Cretonne Coats

Time was when we were taught that plain goods demanded trimming of patterned stuffs, and vice versa, but now on the Ossa of plaid and broadcloth effects we pile the Pelion of stripes and checks. One of the latest cotton costumes is of black and white checked linen with a band on the skirt of cross-wise magpie stripes. The revers and waistcoat are both arranged in this prison uniform fashion. Yes, and we have the prospect of looking like a perambulating bedroom screen in the new cretonne coats that are to startle us with their magnificence next summer. What would grandmothers have thought of us walking abroad in a facsimile of their best quilt covers.

sign at two francs fifty centimes for the outfit, and when imported in large quantities by the French dressmakers, such as Paquin and others, they probably cost much less. Of course, in the transition from the original makers to the designers' hands, their value is enormously increased, and as they are hand-made, these medallions, when inserted in dresses and costumes, command almost as much as the better-known varieties of heavy lace. Travelers in the East, however, seeing these trimmings, which are now offered for sale at the above-mentioned prices, have brought home many of these patterns, and it is astonishing to see what can be done with them by a little clever manipulation and how much they add to a costume.

The pieces all come in the circular shape and are joined together by the pattern, so that care must be taken in dividing them not to destroy the design; but they can be used in many ways, either as medallions and insertions, or around the necks of dresses, in yokes, and in chemises. Another rather annoying habit of the Turks in regard to these trimmings, which would seem to show that they are not made solely for a desire to obtain the best possible price for their wares, is that it is extremely difficult to obtain more than two or three pieces of the same pattern and design, so that if one is anxious to trim a dress or an entire costume in this manner one is sometimes obliged to make use of several different designs. Even the French houses, which import these trimmings, which would seem to show that they are not made solely for a desire to obtain the best possible price for their wares, is that it is extremely difficult to obtain more than two or three pieces of the same pattern and design, so that if one is anxious to trim a dress or an entire costume in this manner one is sometimes obliged to make use of several different designs.

A Prospect of Pockets

It is said that pockets are to return with the fashions of the spring, but in spite of the rumor no one has ventured to foretell where these comforts to humanity will be placed in the costume. It is that they will be fastened, as of old, to the underskirt, or will they take their old position at the pocket, or perhaps, will they be cunningly placed in the belt or one of the new semi-princess gowns?

Perhaps they will find a nesting place at the end of the long sash ends, so popular this year, or, again, there is a possibility that they may be sewn to the hem of the dress of course, no matter where they are, it will only be possible to use them to carry the dainty mouchoir of midday.
