

stores fronting on King street, just east of the mill.

Field's Loss. With every prospect of the mill being saved, Field's loss will not exceed $10,000. This is partly covered by insurance, placed with two local companies and several New York companies.

W. A. Smoot would have nothing to say regarding the insurance on his property. The value placed upon the mill and lumber lost by the Smoot concern is estimated at not less than $100,000. Remarkably quick time was made by the Washington Fire Department in getting two engines to the scene of the conflagration. The department received a call for aid at 10:20 o'clock, and at 11:45 had the two engines on the scene of the fire. It took the Washington firemen just four minutes after the engines were unloaded from the cars to put them in position, get up steam, and have water on the flames.

Had it not been for the check given the fire by the arrival of the Washington engines, the conflagration doubtless would have spread to the mill belonging to the Fields company, consumed the wholesale grocery houses nearby, and leaped across King street to the next adjacent square. Further it would have encountered the lumber yards of Aitchison Brothers.

Volunteers Aid. Besides the five streams of water pouring upon the fire, volunteers with buckets fought the flames from every side. In addition to this, private lines of hose attached to buildings in the vicinity of the fire were also brought into use. Hundreds of persons, not only from the city but from the surrounding country who had been attracted by the dense smoke along the water front, discarded for several miles, obstructed the streets and various other places in the vicinity of the fire, were entirely deserted. Shortly before noon, every car from Washington was crowded with persons who had made the trip over to watch the fire, believed to menace the entire city across the Potomac.

Extra Police Aid. So large did the crowd become that representatives of the Washington police force were detailed to assist the Alexandria authorities in enforcing order. Until the arrival of the Washington engines, George W. Petty, directed the local fire fighters. Deputy Chief Sullivan of the Washington department, took command shortly before the Washington steamers arrived. A call was sent to Washington for the fire boat, but it was not in condition to be repaired. The repairs were rapidly completed, however, and the boat reached Alexandria at 1 o'clock.

"Roof Fighters." Councilman Howard W. Smith struggled manfully with a hose at one time, and his fellow-councilman, Usher E. K. S. Leadbetter, joined what was known as "roof fighters," standing guard to prevent dangerous sparks from spreading the fire to adjoining buildings.

Fire Losers. After the excitement had subsided it was found that but three concerns will be actual losers by the fire, although a number were not so serious inconvenienced for fear that the flames would spread to their possessions. The losers are: W. A. Smoot & Co., estimated $100,000; Henry K. Fields & Co., estimated $40,000; and W. A. Barnett, hardware dealer, damage to roof, about $50. The roofs of the establishments conducted by Charles King & Sons, wholesale grocers, and the branch establishment of Corby's also caught fire, but were quickly extinguished, without damage, by the bucket brigade.

Practically all of Alexandria was upon the scene. Business was suspended uptown, and some of the merchants closed their business and mingled with the thousands near the water front.

Fire Boat On Scene. Captain Stultz brought the fireboat down. It was towed part of the distance, but on the way got up sufficient steam to outdistance the tug which started with it. The boat pulled alongside the wharf of the Washington and Potomac Steamboat Company and immediately opened upon the fire with three streams of water, cozzies on the boat were later put into play.

Lieut. J. P. Sutton and Sergeant Dean of the Harbor Police, of Washington, with three boats were the first to arrive on the scene of the fire. Their force was increased by six other officers from Washington, who arrived shortly before.

Besides the wholesale grocery house of F. S. Harper, four other business houses fronting on King street, just east of where the fire was extinguished, were saved. They are the houses of E. E. Downham, J. H. Max & Son, W. A. Barrett and Herbert Bryant's Sons.

No Fire Lines in City. There are no fire-lines in Alexandria and Chief of Police Goods had his hands full in handling the immense crowds that thronged the vicinity of the largest fire in recent years. In the main, however, perfect order was maintained, the spectators were more anxious to assist than to be in the way and it was found after the firemen were at last in control of the situation that there had been no disorder and no accidents. The flames were put under final control just after 1 o'clock, although the engines are still on the scene pumping water here and there upon the smoldering lumber piles. Among them is the engine owned by the Smoot Company, which practically represents about everything that concerns saved.

Capital Sends Help. Two engine companies, Nos. 4 and 11, and the crew of the fireboat were dispatched to Alexandria by the District authorities this morning to assist in fighting the flames. No time was lost by Commissioner Macfarland and Fire Chief Wagner upon receipt of a telegraphic request from the stricken city for aid.

The two engine companies were ordered out at 10:20 to proceed by rail at once to Alexandria. The departure of the fireboat was delayed because the boat had been sent to the navy yard some time ago to undergo overhauling and cleaning. Upon receipt of the first telegram asking for the fireboat, it was thought she could not be sent. Commissioner Macfarland and Chief Wagner, however, ordered the crew of the boat, which is one of the most powerful river front fire fighters ever built, to get her off ways at the navy yard and in condition to proceed to Alexandria. At 11:30 the boat was in the water and under way for Alexandria.

When the two engine companies left Chief Wagner dispatched Deputy Chief Sullivan with them and instructed him to telephone at once if further assistance was needed.

Every effort was made to give all the possible aid to the Virginia city by both the District officials and the employees of the Department. Thousands Watch Fire. The windows and roofs of many of the tall buildings in Washington were occupied by curious ones while the flames held away in Alexandria. From a distance the conflagration appeared even more serious than last estimates showed, the heavy smoke spreading over a large portion of the city and giving the indication that the fire was in control and might destroy the entire place.

A number of rumors of this sort came across from the Virginia town, causing an outpouring of Washingtonians who wanted to be near the scene. Others were so clamored to building roofs and windows and with field glasses, they wanted to see the spread of the flames. Even from this distance the flames might be plainly seen from the taller buildings and the smoke was discernible to those around.

side of the building Noone climbed the railing, placed his hands above his head as if he were diving and plunged into the water. Other Patients Powerless. Two other patients who were in the ward—one a paralytic and the other recuperating from an operation—were obliged to lie in their beds and watch the struggle between Noone and Callahan, powerless to assist the orderly in the effort to prevent the man from killing himself. As Noone's body shot through the air, Callahan gave the alarm, and several of the physicians and internes rushed out of the building and were at his side in almost no time. All signs of life were extinct. He was carried into the hospital and Coroner Nevitt summoned. Noone had been a patient at the hospital since May 4. He was suffering from what the doctors regarded as an incurable chronic disease, a few days ago it was decided that an operation would relieve his suffering and there was a bare possibility that he might partially regain his health. Although he was a great sufferer, Noone's condition was such that he was able to sit up part of the day and walk about the ward and corridors. Before he got out of bed this morning the doctors told him they had decided to operate.

Did Not Dress Today. It had been Noone's custom to put on a bath robe and slippers when sitting up, but this morning he was dressed only in his night clothing when Miss Minta Howell, the head nurse, came into the ward shortly before 9 o'clock.

When Miss Howell asked him why he did not put on his bath robe, Noone replied: "It is so warm this morning and I feel so bad that I don't want anything else on." Miss Howell had been out of the room less than five minutes when Noone suddenly jumped from the chair and ran to the window. Callahan, who was attending one of the other patients, started after him, and managed to grab his light shirt as he climbed out on the fire-escape.

Coroner Nevitt's Verdict. After an investigation of the case Coroner Nevitt said that Noone had undoubtedly killed himself because he doubted having an operation performed. Dr. Nevitt said further that there was no indication that Noone was suffering from any mental aberration, or that he should have been under special guard or watch any more closely than the other patients.

Mrs. Noone, who arrived at the hospital about two hours after her husband had jumped out of the window, said that she called at the hospital about 9 o'clock last night. He seemed to be very much depressed, she added, over his condition and had been brooding for the last two days. Coroner Nevitt did not seem at all in quest necessary and gave a certificate of death by suicide.

by the Government, as a clerk in the Agricultural Department. He was later transferred to the Postoffice Department, and at the beginning of President McKinley's second administration became a member of the White House executive staff. His acquaintance with the work in that office made him almost indispensable. Under Mr. Loeb, he became well known to the newspaper men, Congressmen, and other visitors because of his wide fund of information on White House affairs. In closing up the affairs of the Roosevelt regime, his presence was considered necessary, as he was supposed to have the most intimate knowledge of office detail, of any man on the staff. He was a Mason and a past master of Andrew Jackson Lodge, No. 29, of Alexandria. He was a Knight Templar, and a member of the Order of the Mystic Shrine.

His Family Connection. His wife was formerly Miss Effie Dietrich, of Richmond, Va., and member of a prominent Virginia family. Her cousin, George Dietrich, was one of the last to see Mr. Netherland alive last evening. Another cousin Mrs. Netherland is Robert Duke, vice president of the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac railroad, who lived at the Netherland home, and who was summoned by Mrs. Netherland this morning when she found her husband's body.

Mr. Netherland is also survived by a brother, W. W. Netherland, who is out of the city today on business for the Southern railway, by which he is employed. He is prominent in fraternal circles of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, and was an active in religious work, as a member of the board of trustees. His body now lies in his late home, and the family will await the return of his brother, expected this evening, before making the funeral arrangements.

Known in Departments. General regret as well as surprise was expressed this morning at the news of his death. Through his long service in the Government, he was well known in the departments where he worked, as well as by employees at the White House.

S. Brown general agent for the Southern Railway Company in Washington, was a life-long friend of Mr. Netherland, had been with him frequently within the last few months, and was at the house this morning. "His death comes as a surprise to me," he said. "Not only has he never given any intimation that he intended to take his life, but he did not seem depressed or in any way suggest that he desired to close up his business affairs."
