Secretary Taft's Pledge Made to China

Doubltess Will Be Kept by President Taft

Believed That Time Has Now Come to Enforce Principles With Japan Threatening to Overstep Line.

The White House declaration that the United States is not the nation that will be the aggressor against Japan in the dispute over the occupation of the islands in the China Sea was to be followed by prompt action in Washington to secure the observance of the treaty of 1904, President Taft said today.

This was accepted by the Japanese mission here as the announcement of a definite policy to be followed.

"I do not believe," the President said, "that the United States is the nation that will be the aggressor. The time has come when the principles of the United States must be enforced. That is why the United States went into the game, and I believe that the United States is going to stay in it till the game is over."

The national government in Washington will see that the treaty of 1904 is enforced, President Taft said, and that the new administration at Peking will carry out its terms.

The President announced that the United States will observe the terms of the treaty of 1904, and that the Japanese government will make full and complete reparation for any loss or damage caused by the recent Japanese action in the islands in the China Sea.

The President said that the Japanese government had been notified of the United States' intention to enforce the treaty, and that the Japanese government had been informed of the United States' intention to take all necessary steps to secure the observance of the treaty.

The President said that the United States would not undertake to enforce the treaty, but that the United States would do its best to see that the treaty was enforced.
