

RESCUERS FIGHT ON IN HOPE OF SAVING MORE FROM TRAP

Cherry Mine Is Scene of Almost Superhuman Energy.

OTHERS ARE ALIVE IS THE BELIEF

Since Yesterday's Rescues Veil of Sorrow Has Lifted From Stricken City.

CHERRY, Ill., Nov. 21.—With every man working with feverish energy, using almost superhuman efforts to break through the walls of coal and rock into the chambers of the death trap where other miners are believed to be alive, and with the mouth of the shaft watched by eager hundreds, hoping against hope for the recovery of their friends and relatives, this stricken village has worked itself almost into a frenzy today.

The return to life of the twenty men who were raised yesterday after all hope had been abandoned roused the inhabitants as never before. Some could not be roused, for the blackened bodies of their dead had already been tenderly carried out of the death trap. But the friends of those whom the searchers had not yet found felt a renewal of hope, and all day they have been at the mouth of the mine, held back with difficulty by the two companies of militia.

Physicians in Waiting. Physicians are waiting in a special car on the siding close by the mouth of the mine ready to do what science can do to resuscitate the dying men as they did the twenty brought up yesterday.

Miners, firemen, officials, inspectors, employees of the Government are haggard and worn this morning. All night long they worked as never before. The discovery of twenty living men in one of the angles of the mine stirred their hearts with the hope of finding more of the doomed 400 with the spark of life still in their breasts. Men who came up exhausted with their great labors heard the cries of joy from the relatives of the recovered miners and rushed back into the mine to continue the efforts in behalf of others who may still live.

All through the morning volunteers flocked into the town, and helpers enough are in the mine. Not a minute is being lost. The workers are being directed by men who know their business and who know that minutes now are as hours to the imprisoned miners if they be still alive.

Stricken City Weeps.

One week ago today women and children were weeping in every house in Cherry. On the streets there were men and women praying and shrieking, going insane from terrible grief and suspense. Days passed with their mingled hope and despair. Then came the terrible apathy in which the stricken families waited but for the return of their dead.

Today everything is changed. Not until every man in the mine has been accounted for will the people of the town give up hope. Houses where grief held full sway through all the long suspense of that terrible week are now bright with hope. Children were told today that their father was not dead, and women wept with joy as they went about their household duties, their steps lighter and their faces brighter than at any time since the fall of the terrible disaster fell upon the town.

Fifty-eight dead bodies have been removed, and the work of searching for the dead goes along together with the search for the living. Carloads of debris are being loaded on the hoist and brought to the surface and dumped, showing the terrible handicap of the

YACHT NOURMAHAL, J. J. ASTOR'S CRAFT, REPORTED SIGHTED

Vessel Said to Have Weathered Storm in Harbor of San Juan, Porto Rico.

NEWS FORWARDED BY DUTCH STEAMER

Estate in New York Receives Cable Information From South America.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The Astor estate received news just before 2 o'clock today that the Nourmahal had been seen in San Juan harbor, Porto Rico, last Sunday.

The news came from a Dutch vessel now off the South American coast by cable.

This information is not regarded as final and the friends of Mr. Astor will not be satisfied until some direct word has been received from him.

REASON FOR HOPE.

However, the lack of communication east of Hapti since the storm leads friends of Colonel Astor to hope that the report from South America is true. Not until last night had the wireless companies been able to get into communication with Porto Rico and with the steamship Ponce in Mayaguez harbor.

PONCE'S REPORT.

The Ponce reported that nothing had been seen or heard of the Nourmahal. The fact that nothing had been heard from San Juan for a week now is the only hope for the latest story from South America.

Scouts Wreck Theory.

Secretary W. A. Dobbins today placed no credence on the report that the Nourmahal was wrecked off the coast of Tampa, Fla.

There was nothing to make him believe that the yacht had at any time been north of Cuba, he said. The last time heard from, Colonel Astor's plan was to go from Porto Rico to the Barbadoes.

He pointed out that it would be impossible to now find the yacht so many hundred miles out of its course.

MRS. JEANETTE T. FORD, 'THE WOMAN IN THE CASE'

WARRINER'S MODEST HOME IN WYOMING, NEAR CINCINNATI.

MADRID, Nov. 21.—Official dispatch from Tenerife states that the district adjacent to Pico de Teyde indicates that one crater is closed, but another is opened and is belching forth a stream of lava.

The new eruption has caused the greatest consternation among the remaining inhabitants. Thousands of the islanders are now fleeing to safety by means of small boats which cannot last long should a wind spring up.

Although Mr. Labeaume is in no way connected with the affairs, which come to light as the investigation increases the shortage, there was a feeling that he should have discovered the peculations going on in the national offices.

William Henschen, a bookkeeper in the employ of the company, shot himself on his wife's grave last July. It was discovered the suicide being attributed to grief over the loss of his wife.

Finally it became known that his accounts were short, but he was bonded for $10,000 in the National Surety Company, and it was announced the bond would cover the shortage.

Public interest in the matter abated until it became known this morning that Mr. Labeaume had laid his resignation before the directors yesterday and that the shortage had reached alarming proportions.

Expert accountants are still at work on the books and there is no hint of the method used in covering so large a shortage. Four of the ten national directors of the order live in St. Louis and they have been in daily session for some time it was learned today.

The association is a mutual protective insurance organization of traveling men, having a membership by every State and credited with the largest membership of any travelers' organization.

President Taft and his party arrived here at 8 o'clock this morning from the trip to Norfolk and Hampton on board the yacht Mayflower, and at the navy yard, where the landing was made, the party disbanded.

Mr. and Mrs. Taft went to the White House in their automobile, and spent the day quietly at home. They were so much fatigued by the trip they did not attend church this morning.

By his indorsement of the work of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the President has aroused greater interest in the project than has hitherto been the case at any time.

Members of the association, who arrived in Washington today, say they will be able to raise large amounts of money for advertising and boosting the movement. They expect cities which have been contributing only a few hundred dollars a year to the cause to come across with thousands, and they think the widespread interest in the campaign will make Congress more liable to act on it favorably.

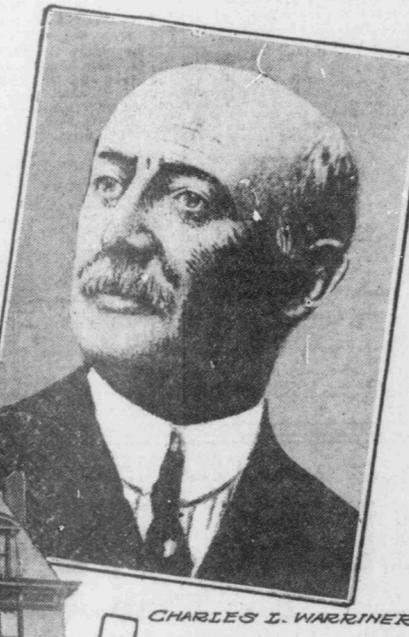

The President expressed himself today as greatly pleased with his trip. The seventy-five newspaper correspondents who went to Norfolk as the guests of the city reached Washington this morning on the Norfolk and Washington Steamboat Company's steamer Southland. They had even a better time than the President.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Beekman Winthrop, who was present at the meeting between State and Navy Department officials, said today that for diplomatic reasons he could not discuss the program outlined, adding:

When the guide pointed out the big gator, every hunter fired and the reptile died soon afterward. Each hunter claimed to have fired the fatal shot. The skin will be shipped to the United States when tanned, and the teeth will be divided among the hunters as souvenirs.

The members of the shooting party were Sherley, Fitzgerald, Fahy, Shields, and Dodge. Sherley and Fitzgerald each scored a kill on an expedition up the Cherrarr river, but the alligators sank before their bodies were recovered. Consequently the party returned empty handed.

It was known that Miss Smith had in her possession a considerable sum of money which she had recently realized from the sale of her farm products. Some years ago Miss Smith's home was entered at night by a negro man who attempted to rob her, but was driven off by the aid of a double-barrel shotgun.

STEALS THOUSANDS TO BUY SILENCE OF VAMPIRE PAIR

C. L. Warriner, 'Big Four' Treasurer, Accuses Man and Woman.

WERE UNMERCIFUL, HE NOW DECLARES

Woman Denies Adding to Scourge of Remorse by Telling of Loot.

THIS is the modern, true version of "The Vampire," Kipling's masterpiece.

It is told in the form of exclusive interviews, love letters, blackmailing missives, bucket shops records, and, finally, in a signed confession by "the man" who "made his prayer" to the merciless and unheeding vampire.

The woman has been named by the man's confession as Mrs. Jeanette Ford, now known as Stewart. Her accomplice has been named in the same document as Edward S. Cook, of Chicago. Mrs. Stewart is in jail and a warrant is ready for Cook's arrest. Warriner, the man who has been bled, is also in jail, hopelessly ruined and disgraced.

Here is his story: To prevent exposure of an early indiscretion by a pair of blackmailers, a male Lothario and a female vampire—Charles L. Warriner, trusted treasurer of the "Big Four" railroad, stole a sum estimated as approaching one million dollars.

This is Warriner's statement, made in a signed confession to the officers of the New York Central railroad, of which the "Big Four" is a subsidiary corporation. Expert accountants have already traced thefts of $643,000 to Warriner, and they say more will be uncovered.

Friends of the accused man say he knows so much of the dealings of the "Big Four" with favored shippers that serious prosecution of him is unlikely. In short, they intimate that, to escape long imprisonment the man who has been blackmailed will become a blackmailer.

By RICHARD J. BEAMISH. HERE is a man who is glad that he has been exposed as an embezzler of a sum approaching a million dollars.

He is glad that his employers, the officers of the Big Four railroad and its parent corporation, the New York Central railroad, know him to be a thief, and that the path of punishment lies clearly outlined before him.

He is glad because the torture of blackmail has been lifted from his life, because the fear of detection, the constant strain of hidden crime that tore at him for twelve years have passed, and that which may come to him can be but small in its power to hurt as compared with the ordeals through which he has passed. From his own lips, from the written and spoken words of his relatives and friends, from letters both tender and profane, this narrative of one man's terrible torture and complete disgrace is constructed.

The names that are here made public have been pronounced by the victim in two formal confessions. Other names will be made known in the development of this—the biggest, single-handed embezzlement.

MANASSAS, Va., Nov. 21.—The home of Miss Ella Smith, who resided alone in a house on the battlefield of Bull Run, was totally destroyed by fire during the night.

Miss Smith has not been found nor has any information reached her friends as to her whereabouts. The impression prevails, that she either perished in the flames or was murdered and the house burned for the purpose of concealing the murder.

It was known that Miss Smith had in her possession a considerable sum of money which she had recently realized from the sale of her farm products.

Some years ago Miss Smith's home was entered at night by a negro man who attempted to rob her, but was driven off by the aid of a double-barrel shotgun.
