The Third Field Artillery, while Roosevelt, surrounded by the commanding general's staff, drove hurriedly over the great field, where infantry, cavalry, artillery and engineering branches of the regular army are camping. No dress parade or formal review was held, regular camp routine not being disturbed by Roosevelt's visit.

Citizens of Arizona City Lined Up Along Border to See Battle

DOUGLAS, Ariz., March 12.—Another fierce engagement between the federal and insurgent troops at Agua Prieta, Mexico, is imminent. Captain Johnson, commanding the Tenth United States Cavalry, on duty here, received a dispatch today from General Wood, commander-in-chief of the United States army, directing that Gen. Jose Blanco, the insurgent leader, was returning to the attack of the town after having been repulsed by Colonel Moroy's federals at noon yesterday.

Intense excitement followed the receipt of the news and the United States cavalry at once took up a position along the border to prevent violation of the neutrality laws. Like spectators in a grandstand, the 6,000 inhabitants of Douglas and vicinity early today gathered along the international line, eager to witness another clash between the Mexican forces.

Eight hundred men participated in yesterday's engagement—500 insurgents and 300 federals. In view of the fact that 30 federal reinforcements reached Agua Prieta from Guaymas this morning, Blanco is expected to throw his entire force into today's engagement.

Cruiser Washington Leaves Portsmouth on Way to Cuban Coast

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., March 12.—The armored cruiser Washington left here early today for New York, whence after taking on supplies she will proceed to Guantanamo to join the three other cruisers now on their way to the Cuban coast.

MEXICAN SITUATION GROWING SERIOUS

Developments of Last Few Days Cause Apprehension and Misgiving—Insurrectos Insist That Diaz Step Down.

The Mexican situation today has grown to proportions even more grave and alarming than those of a week and a half ago. The sudden order for mobilization of 20,000 troops on the border startled the country.

The ramifications of the trouble continue to grow and instead of the way having been paved for an adjustment of the difficulties by the developments of the past week, the outlook is much more calculated to cause apprehension and misgiving.

Despite the denials of the War Department today, the report persists that the department has all plans made for the mobilization of another division near the Mexican border. It is even reported that this force is to be hurried to the front this week.

That there should be any need for the hastening of such a powerful army to the Mexican border is deemed incomprehensible in most quarters in Washington. Should a second mobilization order come, it would be impossible to reach any other conclusion than that an expedition across the border was imminent.

Centers of Activity.
Washington and New York alike are centers of activity. Senator Jose Limantour and Ambassador de la Barra remain in New York today and so does Dr. Gomez, head of the insurrectionist junta here. In spite of all denials, it is known that in the last two days there have been conferences between representatives of the Diaz government and the insurrectionists in New York. Whether Senator Limantour and Dr. Gomez have actually met each other or whether each has ascertained the sentiments of the other through third persons, is not known.

Good reason exists for the belief that any efforts to bring about an understanding between the two factions as the result of the New York meeting will fail. The understanding is that Senator Limantour would like to use his good offices with Dr. Gomez to bring about an adjustment, but the insurrectionist leaders are not keen for this, for the reason they do not believe Limantour has any authority to make such an adjustment. It is believed that any assurances he might give would not be respected by the Diaz government.

What the insurrectionist demands in fair elections. They are convinced they can never get these so long as Diaz remains president, and while Ramon Corral, vice president, is in authority, no negotiations for an adjustment will come to anything, it is said, until both Diaz and Corral are willing to step down. Limantour is not personally objectionable to the insurgent party, but a full, free election is what the insurrectionists demand, and that they will keep on fighting until they get it.

Revolution Spreads.
In the meantime, the flames of revolution continue to spread in Mexico. Nothing has appeared to indicate that the order for martial law will have any other effect than to make the struggle in Mexico more meretricious.

A startling statement was given out here today by Senor Sanchez-Azcona, of the revolutionist junta here. He declares that the recent order of the Diaz government suspending the operation of the Twenty-ninth article of the constitution, which amounts to ordering martial law, means that the 5,000 prisoners in jail at Mexico City on political charges and thousands of political prisoners in jail in other parts of the republic will be shot.

It is announced that on Thursday, through the headquarters of the in-

MADERO BLAMES HIS SCOUTS FOR DEFEAT

Insurrecto Chief Says They Failed to Locate Col. Cuellar.

EL PASO, Tex., March 12.—That the fighting at Casas Grandes, in which Madero's company of American artillerymen was practically wiped out, was the fiercest of the revolution so far, was further indicated today by the stories of refugees who reached this city. They confirm the report that Madero has been able to make no further attack on the town, but is awaiting re-enforcements.

The latest advices say that Lieut. Col. Giuseppe Garibaldi and L. G. De Lara, at first reported killed, are alive, although wounded. Capt. Eduardo May, personal aide to Francisco Madero, is a prisoner.

Madero, in a letter received here, says that a dispatch from Cuellar to a blunder by his scouts. They were sent to locate the federal re-enforcements under Colonel Cuellar, but failed to do so, and the latter attacked the revolutionary army in the rear cut the American artillery company to pieces and compelled the main army to retreat.

French Warships Will Remain at Vera Cruz Until Further Orders

MEXICO CITY, March 12.—El Diario publishes a dispatch from Paris that the French cruisers Gloire, Admiral Aube and Conda, sister ships of 10,000 tons, will remain at Vera Cruz until further orders.

There is much French capital invested in the banks, the French having the controlling interest in the Banco Nacional. The French control the dry goods business of the country and also large cotton mills, especially at Rio Blanco, where there was trouble with the revolutionists. It was estimated lately that the total investments of the French in Mexico amount to $200,000,000.

Half-breeds on Warpath in Yucatan as Far as The Guatemala Border

PROGRESO, Mexico, via wireless, March 12.—The revolutionary movement in the states of Yucatan and Chiapas has assumed formidable proportions. The whole of Yucatan extends as far south as the Guatemala boundary. Half-breed natives and the Yucatan army also large numbers of the insurrectos. Three schooners loaded with arms and ammunition were captured on the coast of Yucatan. The government is rushing troops to the scene, but the federal forces available are not sufficient to cope with the situation. Urgent appeals for additional troops have been sent to Mexico City. The governor of Yucatan has petitioned the federal government to proclaim martial law.

Galveston Is Quiet, With Provost Guard Patrolling Streets

GALVESTON, March 12.—With 12,000 American soldiers confined in camp by orders of the commander to prevent a renewal of attacks on Mexican and negro residents by troops, in which the latter were killed, Galveston today is under a form of military law. A provost guard of twenty-five men is patrolling the streets of the regated district, occupied chiefly by Mexicans and negroes.

Colonel Hall's restrictions of camp life are more than fifteen men a day and the placing of a military guard in a thickly populated part of the city. The military force that early yesterday morning between visiting troops and Mexicans and negroes.

No Mercy to Federals Is Madero's Order to Army, Courier Says

EL PASO, Tex., March 12.—The "no quarter" order is already having its effect on the Mexican revolution, according to a courier who arrived here today from Francisco Madero's camp. He declared Madero has ordered his men to show no mercy to federal soldiers.

While the general belief is that the order resulted from the withdrawal of certain constitutional guarantees by the Diaz government, it is reported that it was more directly prompted by the deliberate killing of wounded insurgents at the recent battle of Casas Grandes. An American railroad man from Sabinal declared today that several federal soldiers were killed and that the federal soldiers shot down all wounded insurgents found after the engagement there.

The Fourth United States Cavalry is now in El Paso, two troops having arrived during the night. Bands of armed men, believed to be insurrectos, began to gather early today south of Juarez. Whether this means another movement against Juarez is not known.

Telepost Company Has Abandoned New England

BOSTON, March 12.—The Telepost Company, which entered the field of commercial telegraphy in 1898, by acquiring the "Old Atlantic" line between Boston and Portland, has practically abandoned the New England field. The last of six branch offices of the company in Boston was closed last night. The Telepost has also given up in Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill, Dover, Portsmouth, Exeter, and Madeford. L. W. Shumaker, "traffic superintendent" came over from New York to order the closing. There was no statement for the public.

MEXICANS GREET FORT MYER MEN

Third Battalion of Artillery Has Lively Time Detraining at San Antonio—Mexicans Wonder At "El Gringo" Hustle.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 12.—Seven bare-footed Mexicans perched like scarecrows on the top rail of the fence surrounding the property of the San Antonio Brick Company and saw what there was to see in the cactus-strewn and mud-splattered yards of the railroad companies' spurs. Under their steely hats the Mexicans' faces were immobile as those of wooden Aztec gods, only their eyes roved, and from their lips came continuous thin streams of cigarette smoke.

What those passive Mexicans saw was "El Gringo" on the hustle.

"El Gringo" in this instance was a great patrol of cavalrymen, artillerymen, and horse wranglers, switchmen, roustabouts, and mounted officers of the United States army snaking stores, horses, and cannon off cars innumerable. To the sad-eyed brothers from over the Rio Grande this was an incomprehensible expenditure of energy—things were being done in a most remarkable manner. The wheels were moving instead of manna.

Nothing But Trains.

There from the fence where the Mexicans peered as they gazed over to the thin bridge that lifted above the network of tracks a half mile away was nothing but trains and more trains standing side by side on brother spurs awaiting to be unloaded. Every hour or so a restless little switch engine would sputter down from the wilderness of tracks somewhere up the line, take a grip on a string of cars that had been emptied and go snorting off, to return like a retrieving dog with a string of pushing ahead of its nose.

The half hours were punctuated by the arrival of troop trains from the North and East, out of which infantrymen and cavalry troopers piled pell-mell and marched off to the signal of the bugle.

The downpour had converted the detraining yards into a contour map of bogs and small seas. Everywhere the thick adobe mud, like nothing so much as composition of petroleum and asphaltum, stood up in menacing ruts and rimmed the banks of wallows with treacherous pitfalls. When work had first begun early in the morning, Captain Normyle, of the quartermaster's department at Fort Sam Houston, who is the overworked officer, having all the details of the detraining in charge, had put a double score of Mexicans and negroes at work filling the bog holes with mesquite brush and drating off the worst of the standing pools. Even the water of the widest range of army water cabs had to be hauled all day long by the mule wranglers before the adobe was completely conquered by the plunging animals.

Fort Myer Boys Arrive.

There into the midst of the flooded yards came the second battalion of Third Field Artillery, comprising Batteries D, E, and F, all the way from Fort Myer, Va. In three sections they came, each train composed of stock cars for the horses, long links of flat cars whereon the guns were blocked and crapped, and at the end, the tourist Pullmans for the men and the first-class Pullman for the officers. The sections were separated in their arrival by an hour and more, and as each nondescript string of cars, which had traveled thus on passenger schedule across the continent, pulled into the yards men and officers set to work with odd haste to remove their impedimenta.

Capt. Ebrooke Payne, in command of the battalion, had his horse brought down the runway from the first of the horsecars, mounted it and then splashed back and forth through the morasses, directing his men in every move. Out of freight cars came tents, according to the battery to which it belonged. Then against the side of each of the five horse cars in turn were piled up the packs and supplies. Men disappeared with loops of halters on their arms to carve out the horses from the stamping, snorting messes inside.

A group of troopers from the Ninth Cavalry, awaiting the switching of their own horse cars, disposed themselves on convenient stacks of hay along side the cursing, struggling artillerymen and gave them the sweet benefit of their experience trotted. "Hi, whisper your name in his ear, you rummy," one grinning cavalryman yelled, "then he'll come like a little lamb."

"Whisper in His Ear."

"Give his tail the Swedish twist if he don't want to get out in his turn," another called to a fellow with red stripes, who was trying to shut off the wind of a big bay and keep him from crowding to the runway before his horse.

The Swedish twist is a great inspirer of horses. Two big blue boys from their halter straps, plunged down the runway and began to run amuck through all the piles of guns, grain, and greasers. Instantly cavalrymen were down from their hay piles with arms outstretched, mounted officers were being splashed to their eyes in mud, and even the white-eyed negro roustabouts dropped their grubby hoses over the runty cactus and gave chase. After they had had their little fling both runways trotted up to the line of tethered gun pullers with the most unctuous innocence shinning from their eyes.

It was then, during the horse chase, and only then, that the seven scarecrows on the fence stirred with excitement.

Complainant Not Able To Come to Police Court

BEGS WIFE TO STOP SUIT FOR DIVORCE

Charles Vermuele Promises He Will Be a Model Husband.

If his wife, Mrs. Clara Vermuele, will stop divorce proceedings, Charles Vermuele, an engraver in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, in an answer to the divorce suit filed in the District Supreme Court, promises to give her every pay check, drink nothing but beer, never curse or abuse her and be a model husband.

Answering his wife's charges in her bill for divorce, Vermuele admits striking her, but says she struck the first blow. Forgetful attentions with milk bottles as missiles are charged to his wife by Vermuele, who declares she has a "vile temper, owing to excessive use of cigarettes."

Vermuele denies excessive use of liquor, charged by his wife, who says he was intoxicated continually, except when at work.

That he is entitled to live in their home, at 2445 Eighteenth street northwest, alleging that it was his money that paid for the residence, is asserted by the defendant. He admits the contract with his wife, formally agreeing to be temperate and attentive to her as "boss" home, with the condition that he was to leave home if he violated any of the agreements.

Vermuele says he will "let bygones be bygones" if his wife will resume living with him and discontinue her divorce suit.

Funeral of Ralph Colman.
Funeral services will be held tomorrow for Ralph Colman, son of Fannie Colman, who died yesterday at the family home, 1917 North Capitol street.
