For The Times' Children Just Before It's Bedtime

Tim and Ted. Ted took his place on top of the fence and went to sleep.

Tim and Ted were black kittens, and they were fast growing to be big kittens, too. They were so near alike that you could only tell them apart when you looked at their feet. Ted had one white paw, while Tim was all black—not a bit of white on his little body.

Now Tim and Ted were growing to be very bad kittens, for they chased butterflies and birds, and sometimes they caught a bird and ate it. "I think we could catch more birds," said Tim, "if there were not two of us, one of us is always sure to be seen."

"Now, I have a scheme that I am sure will help us. We must not be seen together, and then the birds will think there is only one cat."

"You go to sleep on the top of the fence, where you can be plainly seen, and I will hide behind a bush, and when the birds see you asleep they will fly down to the ground and I can catch them."

Ted agreed to this if Tim would promise to sleep as long as he did. Tim promised he would, and the next morning Ted took his place on top of the fence and went to sleep.

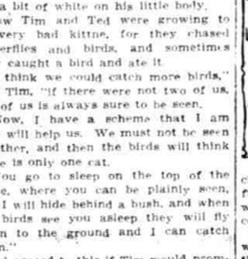

Pretty soon the birds saw Ted, and after looking about for Tim and not finding him they flew down to the ground. Out dashed Tim and caught one of the poor little birds and carried it into the bushes.

Away flew the others into a tree, where they could see Ted on the fence. Then they knew what had happened. "We will pay him off tomorrow," said one bird. "He will sleep on the fence and his brother will watch to catch us, and I think that will be the last time they will try that trick."

Tim waited until he was tired, and being satisfied that the birds would fly down again that day, he awakened Ted.

The next morning Tim took his place on the fence and Ted hid behind the bush, but not a bird came down. He could see them in the tree, but they did not seem hungry that morning, although there were crumbs on the ground.

Julia Murdock Tells of New Films Planned for Moving Picture Theaters

Robin Hood Has Been Filmed for Production on Screen by One Company.

Among the several new motion picture releases are some that will be of especial interest to the lover of poetry and classical literature. "Robin Hood," that stirring legend of Sherwood Forest, which has been made into grand opera by Reginald DeKoven, and otherwise preserved in song and story since the early days of the English, has been filmed for the motion picture screen.

The popular story of "Robin Hood" and his "merrie men" is told in a wonderful series of color pictures by the Kinemacolor Company, many of the pictured films having been made in Sherwood forest. A strong love interest is introduced and develops some thrilling situations, in addition to the familiar features of the old legend. The play will be among the early fall releases in this country.

Without any doubt the company which has lately been organized in America, at the same time attractive school costume. Not only are the middy blouses popular, but the Balkan blouse, the Norfolk jacket in white, or the Jack Tar blouses are worn. All these styles are selling at the department store in Seventh street, between D and E, for 77 cents. They are made of heavy material, with white, red, or blue trimmings, and collars. Some of the blouses are fitted with patent leather belts.

One of the little touches which gives the summer bungalow such an attractive appearance is the use of curtains at the small dormer windows, at the cellar windows and covering any round or square fancy window. These small windows do not require as much material for curtains as the larger windows, and it is often difficult to buy little enough for them. The department store in Seventh street, between D and E, is selling curtain ends for 15 cents. They are of the best materials and in charming designs, one and a half and two yards in length, fifty inches wide.

Consistent wearing of middy blouses for young girls at school is a means of insuring them comfort and of greatly lessening the laundry heap. Worn with pleated or plain skirts of dark blue serge, they make a serviceable and smart outfit.

"The Proof of the Pudding" is in the eating of it. To thoroughly convince yourself that no other flour gives such perfect satisfaction as Cream Blend Flour.

Order a sack and give this noted flour a trial in your own home. Your grocer will supply CREAM BLEND FLOUR. Insist on having it.

Seen in the Shops

There are any number of ways in which a Panama hat may be ruined, but one of the most popular is that of having it cleaned at some of the small shoe shops in town which advertise that they shine shoes, in all fashions, and clean hats "while you wait."

Invariably there is a wash of oxalic acid used in the cleaning process. This acid eats into the straw and will cause it to crumble and break if it is not washed off at once. When the unfortunate hat comes from the cleaner's it presents a good appearance and one is inclined to laud the clever man with kind words—but not for long. After two or three days, the Panama becomes of a yellowish tint, and the slightest bending will break the straw and make a tear as neat as if it had been done with a knife. That is because the hat has rotted with the oxalic acid which has remained in the straw. The only hope is to wash the hat as quickly as possible in lukewarm water and pure soap.

Then, dear reader, the next time your Panama is to be cleaned, take it not to the small shoe shiner, but rather to a regular hat dealer. There is a most honorable, and reliable firm in Edgewood street northwest, in the four hundred block, whose workmen know how to clean any kind of straw in a safe and sane manner.

Distressed—An astringent lotion, if carefully and persistently used will contribute toward reducing the size of your nose. Here is an excellent one: Once each of alcohol and water, dissolved and applied to the nose at least twice a day, often if necessary. This wash will close the large pores of which you speak, and reduce the fat at the end of your nose.

Mrs. C. D. The only way to remove fatfulness from the flesh is to go to a reliable surgeon. This department is advised that the operation is a simple but rather painful one.

This department is indebted to Mrs. James, 217 First street northwest, for what she declares is an excellent potato catsup recipe, which will be furnished to any who will send a stamped, addressed envelope to this department with a request for it.

Jack London's Stories Are Another Source of Thrilling Reels.

known as the All-Star Feature Film Company, having for its purpose the same as the foregoing English firm, will tend to raise the standard of photo plays in America. The offices are in that Mecca for movies, New York, and it is the intention of the producers to present in motion picture form the important dramatic and comedy successes of the legitimate stage.

"Arizona," the late dramatic revival of which has been of such interest in New York, will be one of the first plays to be filmed. Augustus Thomas, author and playwright, will direct personally the greater part of the work. Stars both from the legitimate stage and the motion picture world, according to their fitness for certain roles, will be chosen with great care for the various picturesque characters in which this play abounds.

A glance at the pages of the motion picture releases in any of the magazines devoted to the drama will prove that the general tone is improving as regards motion picture plays. Only this week a New York firm announces a series of pictures exploiting stories of Jack London, which furnish all the melodramatic interest for which any sane person could wish. Even the Wild West films are growing more conservative, and since Western producing organizations have sprung into existence there is a much more strict supervision given to the "wild and woolly" Western picture. Competition with Western firms makes Eastern organizations eager to be true to life.
