YOUTH DEFENDS U. S. ON LINKS

Francis Ouimet Faces Best Golfers of England at Brookline Country Club.

OPPOSES RAY AND VARDON

Experts Agree That American Boy Has Chance to Establish Superiority.

BROOKLINE, Mass., Sept. 20.—Francis Ouimet, a frail youth of twenty years, today defends the honor of the United States against the best veterans of England on the links at the country club. Today he enters upon the final round of the open golf championship against Edward Ray and Harry Vardon, England's greatest performers, and those who saw him play during the year...

The afternoon's work was just as good. The soggy greens interfered with some of the fine work, but the players managed to make good scores. Ray and Vardon came with cards of 75 and none expected Ouimet to catch them, as he sloshed around with fours and fives. But beginning with the fifteenth hole he got his game in hand and from then on forged rapidly ahead until he had passed from the minds of the gallery until it was heard that Francis Ouimet was playing fine golf on his outward course. Ray had come in with a card of 76. Then came Vardon's 78, tying the total of Ray with 225 for 54 holes. Into the limelight came Ouimet, whose 74 brought him up even with the Englishmen.

BINGLES AND BUNTS

Certain writers have panned the Cardinals for only drafting one or two men. On the other hand, we believe they should be given credit for the finest philanthropy the game has ever shown—for an amazing amount of mercy in giving the poor, inoffensive bushers a chance to get started with a regular ball club.

Two weeks from today and the curtain again flutters across the stage—leaving but two actors of the sixteen who started back in April. In the last three years, out of sixteen ball clubs exactly three have figured in the world series salvage—in the main glory of the game. In the last four years Giants and Athletics have figured on three occasions, which shows again how hard it is to dislocate a ball club that has once fought its way to the top.

They once said that "truth was stranger than fiction." Jimmy Hopper, in his Saturday Evening Post yarn, has turned this eminent theory upside down. He has a New York manager draft a pitcher for the world series two days before the series starts—has this pitcher report after the Giants have lost two games—and then the drafted one kicks in and wins three straight games—and the main dough.

Washington's 1913-14 bowling season was officially ushered in Thursday night when the Commercial Circuit rolled the first league game of the year. Wm. Hahn & Sons took the measure of the Columbia Printing Company team by two games out and three in. This is the first season on the alleys for Columbia, and it started out its measure by making its first string from Hahn by 450 to 434. The latter team, however, struck its stride in the second game, winning by 425 to 422.

Conrad B. Doyle, who today holds the tennis title of the Columbia Country Club, as a result of defeating Spencer Gordon in the finals in three straight sets by 6-2, 6-3, and 6 to 4, will have another chance to establish, beyond question, his superiority when he again meets Gordon in the annual District championship tourney on the courts of the Bachelors' Club in Woodley Park next week. Gordon, who is District champion, was unable to cope with the long reach and cutting drives of Doyle, besides pocketing the title in men's singles. Doyle also took high honors with Paul J. Treanor in the semi-finals when they took the measure of Spencer Gordon and J. L. Moore, the scores being 6-2, 4-6 and 6 to 1. A high class of team work was plainly responsible for this victory.
