

Began Career as Actor Here Fifty Years Ago

William J. Ferguson First Saw Over Footlights in Ford's Theater in 1865.

SUCCEEDED FROM START Returns to Washington to Celebrate Golden Jubilee With Continued Work.

By GARDNER MACK.

If at first you DO succeed? That is one of the things the busy-body philosophers who sat up nights thinking up nice little moral codes for other people completely overlooked. But the chances are if they had thought of it they would have sentenced the successful person to half a century of hard work making repeated bull's-eyes on the target of popular esteem—with no time off for good behavior and no alms allowed to be taken over.

This idea is particularly pertinent for the reason that today, March 13, 1915, William J. Ferguson, character actor, farceur, pantomimist, light comedian, will end the fiftieth year he has played on the stage in Washington—the fiftieth anniversary, as well, of his very first appearance on the stage, for he started here—in a series of plays in which he has invariably been a success—no matter what the play might have been.

The business of being a success for fifty years—a repeated, continuous, never-say-die success in any and every kind of a part that comes to the lifetime of an actor, isn't one of the easiest things in the world, when you come to think of it. The memory of the youngest theatergoer in the city is long enough to recall successful actors who have failed—even if that memory extends over but part of this season.

Mansfield's Tribute. And the memory of the oldest theatergoer cannot recall a part in which William J. Ferguson did not succeed in doing not only what the author intended, but in a great many instances in making a real work of art out of what the author showed every evidence of being the tangible intentions whatsoever.

The late Richard Mansfield, in a burst of unaccustomed self-prospection, once declared that Mr. Ferguson was the second greatest actor in America—the modesty of Mr. Mansfield making it possible for him to name the first without blushing.

It was in the spring of 1865 that Ferguson made his first appearance on the stage. Curiously enough, his theatrical debut took place within a block and a half of the Columbia Theater where he is playing this week in "The Blue Envelope." It was at Ford's Theater on Tenth street, between E and F streets, that Ferguson, a native of Baltimore and became acquainted with John Ford in school boy days. Ford thought he saw in young Ferguson the makings of an actor, and in 1865 brought him to this city to act as call boy and general assistant handy man at the old Ford's Theater.

In those days it was customary to play a farce after a tragedy had been presented on the stage in order to send the audience home in a happy frame of mind. It was the farce that attracted the attention of the Baltimorean.

Fuse of Laughter. W. J. Ferguson started his theatrical career with a determination to fire the fuse of laughter in every audience he could, and to make that laughter genuine, compelling and all-encompassing. He likewise studied the art of pantomime, and for several years toured the country with a family of expert European pantomimists.

After playing with the Ford Theater stock company in minor parts he went to Brooklyn and played in Mrs. Conroy's stock company for over two seasons. Then he joined Wallack's stock company. When John T. Raymond appeared in Mansfield's "The Guided Ase" in 1874, Ferguson was selected to play an important part, for he had already acquired considerable fame. The following year he toured the country with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence in another famous production of that day, "The Almighty Dollar."

Enters Stock Work. He again went into stock work and with the Madison Square company appeared in the original productions of "Jim the Penman," "Hazel Kirke," and a number of others. He was by that time recognized as practically the only finished American farceur. He brought to his work all the qualities he had shown as a character actor and light comedian, qualities that have made him a distinguished member of the casts of a most varied list of productions, from his "Fatal Card" and "The Girl From Maxim's" to an all-star production of "Romeo and Juliet."

In "The Turtle," produced about seventeen years ago, he had the opportunity to introduce his original farceur methods. They really made the piece and established for all time Ferguson's reputation as a really great actor of farces. Since then he has been said of him that he has shone brightly in more than a hundred good parts out of more poorly constructed dramatic works than any man on the stage.

Will Never Quit Work. He has accumulated a modest fortune, but he never expects to quit work. He declares that he never tires of a role; that every night he acts it, it brings new pleasure to him. He works with each audience as though he was playing a game. He watches every move, studies all the responses that each line gets, and makes his speeches and his actions conform to what he finds is the spirit of his audience.

In all this nothing has been said of the fact that Mr. Ferguson was the actor in the greatest world tragedy. It is usually the burden of all the things that are written about or recited about the actor in Washington—the days that gave him his start toward success—bring moisture to his eyes as he relates the story. But in that matter of being a success without having to try again, Ferguson could probably supply a whole lot of other examples. Some of their philosophy. Just as he has daily, on the stage, given thousands of people their only opportunity to get a whole lot of honest fun, some of them have been left out of their lives. And that is the thought that makes this semi-centennial particularly happy for W. J. Ferguson.

LOCAL AND NEW YORK FINANCIAL NEWS

PRICES ARE FIRMER ON LOCAL EXCHANGE

No Sales Recorded on Regular Call, and Only Two After Its Conclusion.

Though no sales were recorded on the regular call of the Washington Stock Exchange today, and only two sales after its conclusion, prices were firmer than on yesterday. The sales effected after call consisted of 10 shares of American Graphophone common at 60, or more than a point above the price commanded by a similar block yesterday, and $2,000 worth of Potomac Electric Power consolidated 5's at 99 1/2, also a fractional gain over the last previous sale of the bonds.

Washington Gas 5 per cent bonds were particularly strong, being quoted at 105 bid and 105 1/2 asked, compared with 104 1/2 bid and 105 1/2 asked. There were several orders on the floor for the bonds, but none were to be had at 105 or under, the price to which the buying brokers were limited.

The Southern Railway Company will not pay its regular semi-annual dividend on the preferred stock in April. Announcement that the dividend would be passed was made yesterday after a meeting of the board of directors in this city. It was foreseen that no action on the part of the directors would be taken on dividends, and the report was not a distinctive shock to Wall Street.

The only other proceeds since 1897, when the Southern Railway paid no dividends on the preferred stock, were after the 1907 panic, when payment was deferred for practically a month. The rate in 1897 and 1898 was 1 per cent per year. In 1899 the preferred paid 2 per cent, and in the following year 3 per cent. In 1901 it was 4 per cent, and from April, 1902, to April, 1907, the rate reached its maximum of 5 per cent. On October 17, 1907, a dividend of 1 1/2 per cent was paid from accumulated surplus, and after that there was not another dividend until April, 1911, when 1 per cent was paid. Another dividend of 1 per cent was paid in the second half of that year, making 2 per cent for the year. Conditions improved in 1912 and 1913, and payments of 4 1/2 per cent and 5 per cent, respectively, were paid in these years.

There was sufficient surplus in 1914 to warrant another 5 per cent dividend, but it was decided to pay only 2 per cent in the last half of the year. The dividend for the second half of the year was in scrip redeemable in five years with interest. The earnings for the year ended September 30, 1914, showed a decrease in the net operating income of $1,500,000 over the previous year. Earnings for the seven months ended January 31 showed gross operating revenues of $37,415,378, a decrease of $1,000,000 from the corresponding period of $38,415,378. The net operating income was $7,650,656, a decrease of $3,618,279, or 31.5 per cent.

The questions of intra-district clearings by the Federal Reserve banks of the country, and of settlements between the district banks, have been referred by the governors of the Federal Reserve banks to a conference with members of the Reserve Board, following a lengthy conference of the governors with the American Bankers' Association. Clearances and a number of other important details of operation of the banks, including cipher and cable codes, relations between the Federal Reserve banks and national banks examiners, foreign exchange, and membership in the American Bankers' Association, were considered by the conference. The subcommittee on clearances consists of Governors Pillsbury, Aldrich, and Seay. This committee will also take up with the Federal Reserve Board the general matter of relations between the banks and the treasury and subtreasuries.

Norfolk Man Hid Gold Coins in Water Pitcher NEW YORK, March 13.—There are four gold double eagles in the office of Hannibal Fitz, cashier of the Imperial Hotel awaiting their owner, who appears to have concealed them so successfully that he gave up trying to remember the hiding place he had chosen. He registered from Norfolk, Va., on March 4 and carried no baggage. He paid for his room in the Imperial a week in advance, and the week ended Wednesday morning. He occupied his room Wednesday night, but has not been seen about the hotel since then. While forming her plan on Thursday a housemaid in the Imperial took up the water pitcher, which was filled. A strange clinking caught her attention and she found the four $20 gold pieces. There is a bathroom connected with this bedroom and the pitcher was only for emergency service.

WALL STREET ISSUES BECOME IRREGULAR

Bearish Trend Among Professionals, With Great Northern Ore Advancing.

NEW YORK, March 13.—Stocks were practically at a stand still today. The market became fractionally irregular on evening up commitments made by traders in anticipation of developments occurring over the week-end. The professional temper has taken a bearish turn for the time being, and reports were circulated that large interests had indulged yesterday in rather heavy selling.
