FIFTY GREEKS HERE EXPECTED TO FIGHT

Most of Reservists in Washington Called to Colors Fought in Balkan War.

About forty or fifty Greeks in Washington, mostly young men who returned less than a year ago from fighting in the second Balkan war, are expected to answer the call to arms of Greece just issued through the consulate here.

There are about 400 Greeks in Washington of fighting age, but only about fifty of these are on the Greek lists of reservists.

James Painter, a waiter at the New Willard, is one of the men back in Washington from service in the Greco-Bulgarian struggle. He said today he would not return because he had married since he came back to this country. Many of his compatriots, he said, had not yet heard of the new call to arms, and it is not known that any have made up their minds to return to the army.

CIRCUS LIVES UP TO ELABORATE BILL

Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows Present Entertainment That Thrills Crowds.

A circus performance that lived up to the most thrilling red and yellow billboard that ever thrilled a freckle-faced boy was witnessed last night by an audience which filled the "big top" of the Hagenbeck-Wallace show at Fifteenth and H streets northwest.

There was plenty of "pop" every minute, from the grand ensemble to the chariot race, but the big feature of the evening was Emil Schwyer and his performing lions. Caged with seven beasts that snarled and roared and threatened viciously at every command he held the throng spell-bound with his daring. The great feat was evidently in an ugly mood, which gave their trainer an unusual opportunity to show his daring command of these animals.

Three rings and two platforms were occupied most of the time, but with rare consideration for the necks of the audience the management did not offer any counter attractions when the most interesting feats were being staged, and that was not impossible to see the whole show.

The performance of an unusually large number of high schooled horses was one of the prettiest things witnessed at the performance, and all the equestrian acts were cheered.

Of clowns there were enough and to spare. Not simply "razorbacks" in freak suits, but pantomime artists that kept little folks and big ones roaring much of the time. A "coach and six" with pigs instead of horses was one clown feature, while a dog disguised as a rabbit that sat up and was shot over with a pop gun every fifty feet, also evoked much laughter.

A large part of the audience stayed for the Wild West performance following the main show and was well rewarded. There will be performances this afternoon and evening, after which the circus will entrain for Fredericksburg.
