

ITEMS OF INTEREST IN AND ABOUT TOWN

News and Gossip of Washington and Washingtonians Teresely Told.

Can girls play baseball? Just ask anyone in southeast Washington. There is a team of them out there that will play any girls team in the city and guarantee to beat it. They call themselves the Jolly Nine, but there are really ten, for there is one substitute. While they are not old enough to vote, they still have full grown ideas as to women's rights and women's prowess. Despairing of finding any girls' organization willing to play them, the Jolly Nine have entered one of the Virginia Avenue Y. T. P. A. ground leagues of boys' games, and stand third with an average of 300. They will better their average as the season wears on, in spite of the handicap of petticoats. Nor do the boys "let em win," because each game is played for all there is in it. The personnel of the team follows: Amy Lang, pitcher; Louise V. Varnum, catcher; Ivy Higgins, center field; Christine Bartlett, first base; Etta Thompson, left field; Mary Disney, right field; Violet Empey, third base; Marie Harmer, second base; Dorothy Hutchinson, shortstop; and Julia Hutchinson, manager. The team has three good pitchers in Lang, Varnum, and Higgins.

Colleges Prepare to Take Up Studies of the Picture Drama

Columbia University Students Devoted Time to Photoplay Last Year.

OTHER SCHOOLS TO TRY IT. Producers to Assist Courses By Providing Prize Play Competitions.

Colleges and universities of the country are becoming interested in photodramatics and there are indications, according to well-informed students of motion pictures, that the photoplay will be a part of university training in the future. Columbia University, in New York, has already given the photoplay something more than cursory study. Last year the dramatic classes of the university gave considerable study to the photoplay. A prize competition was announced with the co-operation of the Lasky company and one of the university students, R. Raiston Reed, is now in Los Angeles assisting in the production of the prize play, "Witchcraft," of which he was the author.

The development of the photoplay into a separate form of dramatic construction within the last two years, has called attention to it from the literary authorities of the country and they have agreed that if the photoplay is to secure the standing its possibilities demand, something should be done in the colleges and universities to develop it further and to standardize its literary form. As the photoplay is essentially a structure of action, rather than a literary form, there has been some hesitation on the part of those charged with the culture of the creative arts to give it recognition. This recognition is demanded now because of the tremendous interest that is shown in the photoplay on the part of the public.

Anything which affects the lives and habits of so many people as the photoplay has done, deserves the serious consideration of the cultured men and women whose business it is to safeguard and to guide the intellectual development of the people as a whole.

The opportunities—too seldom embraced—to develop a new form of creative art, have attracted the attention of college professors of broad vision. It is understood that during the course of the next year classes for the study of picture drama, with the possibility of prize competitions such as that at Columbia last year, will be established at Yale, Harvard, and the University of Chicago. Efforts toward this end are now being made by the photoplay men.

Local Man With Perilous Pauline. Theodore Friebeus, Washingtonian, actor, newspaperman and playwright—or rather reporter, playwright, actor, and always a Washingtonian, to set things in their proper order—has just been engaged as leading man for "Perilous Pauline" Pearl White by the Famous company. Friebeus will be seen raking all the risks with Miss White and cutting up generally like a regular motion picture star. Friebeus first became known in Washington as a member of the editorial staff of one of the local newspapers and an amateur actor. He was born here, and his father was a prominent real estate man. The young Theodore was educated to be an architect, with a course of study in Germany, as well as in local educational institutions. He yearned for distinction as a playwright and actor, however. And he got it. Beginning in a small way with local stock companies, Friebeus became one of the best known stock leading men in the country. For five years he was leading man of the Academy of Music Stock Company, in New York, rated as one of the premier aggregations of the country. He has appeared in several picture plays.

NEW STORE HOURS—Daily 8:45 A. M. to 5:30 P. M. Saturday Open 8:45 A. M. to 6:00 P. M. Kann's Daily Bulletin THURSDAY—FRIDAY—SATURDAY—Attend Our Autumn Pageant of Millinery Modes for 1916-17 The Italian and Spanish styles of the 17th century and Flemish influences that gathered around the brush of Rembrandt have reached down through the centuries and shaped the hats for the present mode. The Spanish student's small, close-fitting turban. The large hat with sharply upturned side. The velvet tam of Rembrandt's own portrait are all here. Again the Directorate period puts forward its finger into present mode and where a crown rises high above its fellows, claims it for its own. The Oriental inspiration puts a note of richness into the other more quiet tones, and Russia, with its almost barbaric influence, plays no small part in the season's style. TAUPE IS THE COLOR OF THE MOMENT—Tete de Negre, sand, tan, navy blue, burgundy, and of course, black, which is always popular, are all favorites. A rich red, in one of the tones of American beauty roses is the one bright spot among the more somber shades. Mink fur and Marten are coming in very strongly for trimming the new hats. Hatters' plush, with velvet facings, and fur and velvet combinations are the favored materials of which hats are built. THREE REPRESENTATIVE MODELS: A Gold brocade picture hat with velvet facing of tete de Negre, and Prince of Wales' feathers. A Gainsborough, with fur crown, and gun-metal ornaments. A large black picture hat with crown or peacock breasts, and trimming. Our Famous $5.00 Trimmed Hats —need no special introduction to the Washington Public. We acknowledge none superior in the style, the quality, the fit, the individualness, the variety, we offer in Trimmed Hats at $5.00. French Hats Copied from Famous Parisian Designers. Again Have Handsome Models Arrived in Autumn Styles of WOMEN'S TAILORED SUITS At—$19.75 The most attractive so far shown at this popular price are these latest arrivals. Distinctive models that have all the pronouncedly advanced features and touches of the season. Plain tailoring, and severely straight lines dignity some styles. Bold effects and a jauntyness of youth distinguish other styles. Where the style is plain, the tailoring is unexcelled, and makes the suit what it is. When trimmed—though the trimming is in a measure subdued, and the tailoring is also excellent, the effect is perhaps a little more dressy. Basket weaves, novel effects; gabardines in their soft surfaced, yet firm weaves; handsome whipcords, and lustrous poplins are the materials leading in favor. Burgundy, blue, brown, green, plum, wistaria, and of course, black, with an unexcelled color list. All sizes. FUR TRIMMED SUITS are attracting much attention just now, especially a beautiful new model, which has a deep black collar of velvet, trimmed with seal fur. This is the long coat style, with belt in back, and is shown in the new Burgundy, Pair, black, and popular taupe. At $29.75 Kann's—2nd Floor.
