

DISPIC SOLDIERS FINISH LONGEST HIKE EVER IN FINE FETTLE

Brigade Arrived at Camp Wilson Today From a Sixty-four-Mile March.

NUMBER OF RECRUITS ARRIVE

Soldiers in Big Camp Are Arranging to Hear Election Returns Tonight.

By Staff Correspondent.

CAMP WILSON, SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Nov. 7.—Completing the longest hike they have ever taken, sixty-four miles, the District militiamen arrived at Camp Wilson this afternoon from Luxella, where they camped for the night. Although a few of them suffered from foot trouble, most were fresh and strong at the finish and cheered lustily when they reached Camp Wilson. All of the men enjoyed the practice march to New Braunfels, and feel that their experiences compensated them for the discomforts endured.

Cook Stoves Going.

When they arrived at Camp Wilson they found the fires in the kitchens roaring and all arrangements made for immediate preparation of their midday meal. Lieut. Charles B. Hamilton, who was in charge of the camp, had everything to make the homecoming of the soldiers a happy occasion.

Film Men in Trenches Locate Good Positions for the Guns

ARE ALWAYS IN THE WAY

But Soldiers Treat Them Well as Headquarters Wants Them Protected and Guided.

Motion picture cameramen are almost as much a nuisance as the enemy on the European battle front, according to one of the officers who has just been detailed on duty with the picture makers. And, also, according to this officer, the camera people have been a lot of help in locating places from which to shoot.

The idea being that with the camera man's trained faculty for picking out locations that sweep the enemy's lines, he naturally picks out good locations for guns also and that no sooner is a camera man planted in such a location than some artillery officer comes along and shunts out the camera so that a gun might take its place.

Capt. D. G. Hertz, who was recently given a leave of absence from the British army after serving two years at the front, is in this country on a lecturing tour.

"The camera man is a horrible nuisance to the busy officer," the captain declares with much feeling. "He has a permit from headquarters and we are ordered to look out for him. The scene isn't staged for a film story at all. The major in charge has to detail some one to act as guide and protector. As soon as the camera is set up in some convenient place the major needs it for a gun and orders the camera out so we have to take it where it will quickly be in the way of some one else."

Officers Must Help.

"If we don't help the camera man he'll complain to headquarters and a sharply worded note of inquiry is pretty sure to come from it, while if we do our best, the higher officer in charge is more than apt to say something sharp. But, of course, that's part of the job."

Camera Replaced Gun.

"It was fairly lively around that front trench that day; but the cameraman was back again before long. I had to find a place for the camera and we put it up on a machine gun embrasure. It is seldom that a camera can get so advantageous a position as that. Most of the battle scenes had been broken by the camera's fall. The camera man had to go back for new supplies."

Honeymoon Postcards.

The Los Angeles friends of Anna Little have been receiving post cards marked "en route." She must have spent a small fortune in these souvenirs at each hamlet the train stopped on her honeymoon trip across the continent. They all give a breath of the joy of being, of the necessary change and rest. Anna promises to have a good time in New York, and it is certain that when she leaves there she will have even more friends than now.

Lamar Johnstone, who has gone to Guatemala with the Nevada company to support Tyrone Power, has an entertaining collection of "still" photographs by which it is comparatively easy to trace the steady progress the photoplay has made during the last few years. This is so especially as regards the scenes and incidents even more so when it comes to a question of lights and effects. The earlier pictures appear very primitive when compared to the more recent photographs.

GOVERNMENT READY TO START WHEELS A-SPINNING AGAIN

Activities in Various Departments to Be Resumed After Today's Voting.

WILSON BACK THIS WEEK

Capital Has Been Quiet Ever Since Congress Adjourned and President Left.

The wheels of government, which have been almost stopped in Washington for a number of weeks, will once more begin to spin when the election is over.

Ever since Congress quit and the President departed for the summer capital, there has been a marked quietude. Cabinet members and high officials have been busy in politics and working hard for the re-election of President Wilson. In the absence of Cabinet heads and the President, departmental developments as a rule have been routine.

Boards To Be Named. Among these matters are the naming of the new tariff commission and also the selection of the shipping board.

Although there was great pressure on Congress to hurry the shipping bill to passage, many weeks have been allowed to pass without anything being done toward setting the movement for government ownership of ships in motion.

Important Questions. On the other hand, if the Wilson Administration is retained in power, there will be highly important questions of official personnel to be settled. That there will be some new faces in the next Wilson Cabinet if this Administration succeeds itself is the understanding here.

The annual message will also take up some days of the time of the President on his return. Its character will depend much on today's results.

The appointment of a new Interstate Commerce Commissioner, the selection of the New York postmaster, the blacklist and retaliatory problem relating to the allies, a prospective bond issue, the soaring cost of living, and many other things demand Administration attention, and there will be plenty of things doing at the White House end of the avenue.

Members of Congress will begin to gather later in the week, and get ready for the coming session.

The highly important investigation of the country's railway problem will begin work on the appropriation bills in two weeks or less.

that the laundry will be a nuisance to sight. If not to smell, while other contented it will be a quiet, inoffensive way for an ambitious young woman to earn a living and to serve others as well.
