

Head of Telegraphers' Union Confers Here With Gompers Concerning Walkout

30,000 AWAIT CALL OF WIRE STRIKE AFTER PARLEY TODAY

S. J. Koenkamp, president of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, is to appear here today for a conference with Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, before calling a strike of 30,000 telegraphers, following the refusal of the Western Union Company to permit their men to join the union.

The matter has been before the National War Labor Board for several weeks, and, pending mediation efforts of William Howard Taft and Frank P. Walsh, joint chairmen of the board, Koenkamp refused to call a strike, despite threats from several divisions of the union to strike independently.

Discharged Employees. Following the request of the board to the Western Union to "abide by the principles contained in the President's proclamation granting the right to organize," the telegraph company discharged more employees, and yesterday decided definitely not to support the board in its policy.

About 35,000 commercial telegraphers will strike, Koenkamp said, and a sympathy strike of 50,000 railroad telegraphers will also be declared. A large news association will be affected also, he added.

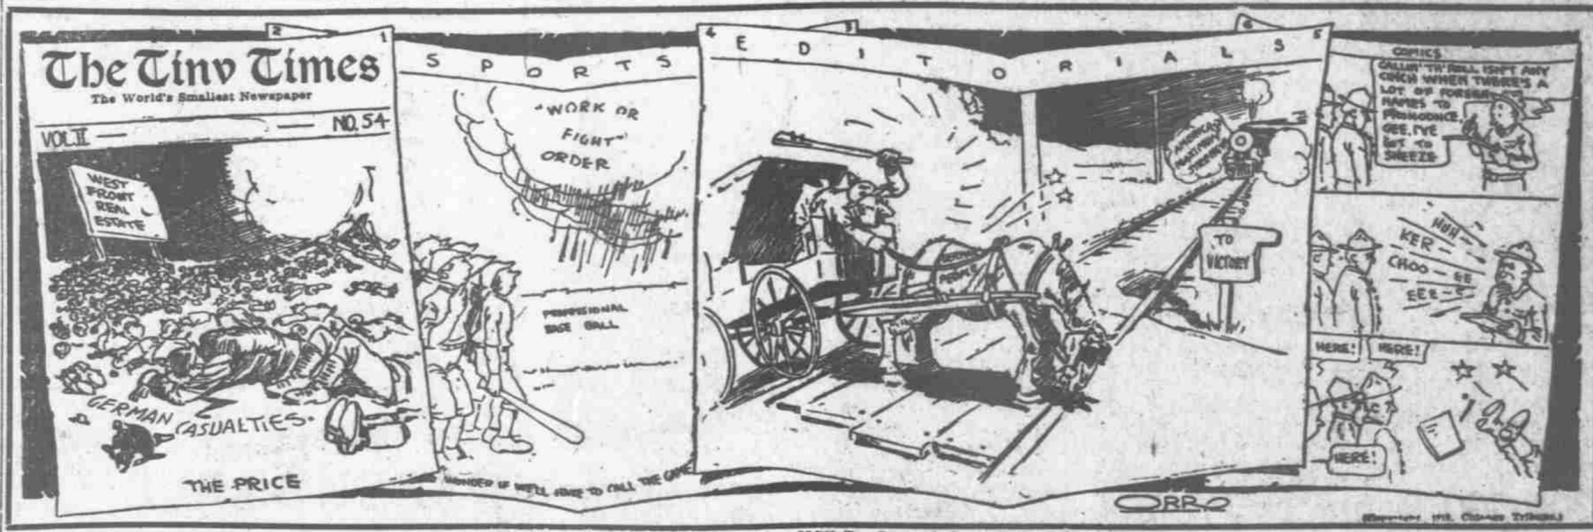

It is known that Gompers will advise Koenkamp to make a final effort for mediation and to call the strike as a last resort.

Koenkamp's statement. Mr. Koenkamp last night issued a statement in New York in which he declared that a strike of telegraphers would be called.

"The report of the national war labor board," said the statement, "compels the union to take the initiative and declare a strike against the Western Union Telegraph Company, in order to enforce the decision of the board. The mediators have not reported on our grievances against the Postal Telegraph Company."

"President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, has asked me to confer with him before declaring a strike. I am going to Washington for that purpose. Confidential instructions will be sent immediately to our membership in more than 200 American cities."

Government Control. The possibility of Government control of the nation's telegraph lines was strengthened today. Officials of the C. T. U. of A. declared the date for the strike had been set, and while no orders had gone out President Koenkamp would go to Chicago this week to prepare them, if a settlement is not reached.

The Tiny Times for Next Sunday Will Be One of Orr's Best Efforts.

week to prepare them, if a settlement is not reached. The greatest unrest in the situation appears in the South, where telegraphers threaten to go out tomorrow morning if their demands are not met.

WASHINGTON WIRE MEN WON'T STRIKE, OFFICIALS ASSERT

Western Union Telegraph operators in Washington will not go out on a strike, and the urgent war business of the Government will not be affected by the calling of a strike by the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America.

This was the optimistic forecast today of Western Union officials, who said that only an infinitesimal percentage of their employees is identified with the organization on the verge of calling a nationwide strike of its members.

There are 80 Western Union operators in Washington exclusive of those working on Western Union wires who are on the Government payroll, it was said by officials of the company today. Just what percentage of this number is known to be identified with the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, officials refused to say. They declared, however, a strike order by the union will not serve to interrupt the flow of war telegraph messages or in any other way interfere with the Western Union Service in this city.

"There will be no strike of Western Union operators regardless of the decision of the operators' union," read a statement issued by the company officials at local headquarters.

H. F. Taft is manager of the Washington branch of the Western Union offices, and Traffic Chief Simson has charge of the operating forces. While awaiting the result of the conference here between Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and S. J. Koenkamp, president of the Commercial Telegraphers Union, regarding the issuance by the union of a strike order, Western Union officials prepared for any emergency.

Reveals Beer In Liquor Hoard

Who revealed to the Times today that the Capitol booze cache contains beer as well as whiskey, and told of one of the ways the "empties" are apparently disposed of.

Would Investigate Cache of Booze

Who holds that the Capital booze cache must be investigated. He told the Times today that he himself noticed the barrel of whiskey bottles in the lavatory of the House Office Building on Friday.

What the Papers Say of Whiskey Bottles

Under the caption "Salvage Twenty-nine Whiskey Bottles in House," The Times' All Empty-Speaker Clark Says That is Only One Drink Apiece—But They Take Big Drinks in Missouri," the Philadelphia Ledger says: "The adage of antiprohibitionists that you never can tell what a Congressman drinks from the way he votes on prohibition, was cited today, when an inquiry was started as a result of the finding of twenty-nine empty whiskey bottles in a lavatory of the office building of the House of Representatives."

The bottles, it was stated, were collected by janitors outside the doors of members' offices, and the collection represented the finding of a few days on only one of the five floors of the building. "There is no law against bringing liquor into the District of Columbia for personal use," but the moral of the story, as related by persons not fond of prohibition, or "dry" members, was that the two-thirds of the present House is recorded in favor of a "bone-dry" nation, and that the labels on the bottles showed that members prefer the better brands of whiskey. Kentucky bourbon predominated in the list.

Speaker Clark surprised. Speaker Clark, who is chairman of the commission in control of the House office building, expressed surprise at the "evidence" of drinking by members who are "conscientious objectors" to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors, and said: "I never heard of it. I know nothing of it. I don't believe members of Congress are drinking. Why, in the first place, the whiskey which would go to those bottles wouldn't make a half a drink around for the House membership. I've been Speaker eight years, and I never saw but one man in the House visibly intoxicated. And he knew enough to vote as he should. They used to have bars here, because they were too hot or because they were too cold. Then they used to drink before they made a speech and after they made a speech. Then they used to drink when they had to listen to a speech. Now, there is remarkably little drinking among the members. That is why I don't think members of the House have had anything to do with this matter."

Representative Randall of California, a Prohibitionist party member of the House, who is the author of an amendment now pending to require the President to prevent the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of beer and wine during the war, demanded an investigation of whiskey drinking in the House office building.

Tells of Photograph. Under a Washington date line of June 3, the Philadelphia Enquirer says: "A photograph of twenty-five empty whiskey bottles found in one of the lavatories of the House Office Building was published today as an argument against the prohibition of beer and wine. The photograph, which shows the prohibition of the lighter beverages in the National Capitol has led to an increase in the consumption of whiskey among national lawmakers and employees of Congress. The statement is made that an average of 100 empty whiskey bottles are taken out of the House Office building every month. No statistics are presented to show whether this is an increase or a decrease."

Some of the members are for an investigation to ascertain the true status of Congress as to prohibition, feeling the discovery was a reflection on a membership which voted for prohibition. Speaker Clark, head of the commission in charge of the House Office building and the House end of the Capitol, said he did not believe that members of the House were drinking. "Why, in the first place," he said, "the whiskey which would go in those bottles wouldn't make half a drink all around for the House membership. I've been Speaker eight years, and I never saw but one man in the House visibly drunk. They used to have bars here. In those days members drank because they were too hot or too cold. They used to drink before they made a speech and after they made a speech. Then they used to drink when they had to listen to a speech. Now there is remarkably little drinking among the members."

Appetites of Congressmen. Representative Randall, the only member elected as a Prohibitionist, said: "I cannot express myself too strongly on this matter. If we are going to have prohibition we ought to have it. There is no reason why a member of Congress should discriminate between his appetite and the appetite of his constituents, or why the District of Columbia should be half dry. It doesn't look very good to the people back home to have Congress legislating to make the States dry and keeping the District only part dry. The same law on prohibition ought to apply to the District of Columbia that applies to any State or Territory having a prohibition law."

Headlines in the Philadelphia Press read: "20 WHISKEY BOTTLES IN HALL OF CONGRESS OFFICE BUILDING." "All Quarts and All Empty—Grist of Day Picked Up By Cleaners and This After Lower Chamber Voted Dry-Talk of An Investigation."

This story, dated at Washington, follows: "A local newspaper today prints a photograph of twenty-five empty quart whiskey bottles collected in one day by the janitors on the fourth floor of the House Office building from outside the office doors of members. Congressmen were taken completely by surprise when informed that the collection was about 100 bottles a month on this floor alone. The House Office building is a handsome marble structure used exclusively by members. The high quality of whiskey demanded by the taste of Congressmen is shown by the labels, which included several well-known brands ranging in age from three to eight years."

CACHE OF BOOZE ON CAPITOL HILL CAUSES SCANDAL

(Continued from First Page.) by a narrow margin, told another story. When Congressman Wood investigated, he found not only whiskey but beer bottles in and about the fountain. Frank P. Coxe, superintendent of the building, today declared that he personally accompanied a Times representative on a tour of the building and court.

The fountain is in the center of a large court equally distant from several lavatory windows. It would require a strong arm to hurl a bottle from the upper stories to the fountain. It is apparent, however, that the bottles were thrown from windows, because of their position around the fountain. One empty whiskey flask was found today, smashed on the east rim of the fountain. The fact that the empty beer bottles and whiskey bottles were on the east rim would not indicate that the bottles were thrown from the lavatory, where the twenty-nine whiskey bottles were located Saturday. This lavatory is on the fourth floor, on the west side of the building, facing the court. There are several lavatories on the east wing facing the fountain.

Variety of Containers. Mr. Coxe and The Times representative discovered three brown bottles standing upright on the north side of the court. A small flask containing a small quantity of whiskey was afloat on the east side of the court. A brown beer bottle was also found on the same side. Two other beer bottles and a bottle which bore the stamp of a Washington soft drink manufacturer were found in the fountain. Still another bottle, bearing the label of a Milwaukee brewer, was found in the grass near the fountain. Mr. Coxe holds the belief that the drinking was done by visitors to the building and not by the Congressmen who have offices there.

"The janitor who had charge of the fourth floor lavatories told me that he had been saving the bottles to sell to a junkman," Mr. Coxe said. "He claims that he had gathered them up for weeks but could not sell them because of the District dry law. 'You say that a Congressman told you of finding bottles in the hallway. I have not heard of it, but I know that bottles have been picked up in the building. You will find the same conditions existing in any office building. People can't drink it on the street and will come in to public buildings to take a nip.' Plans for Inquiry. If an inquiry is started, it will have to be independent of the commission in charge of the House Office Building, Speaker Clark declared, chairman of the commission, declared today. Asked if there was any likelihood that the commission would initiate an investigation, Speaker Clark declared: "Not a bit on earth. The commission has certain well-defined powers and duties, and this is not among them. The situation in which members find themselves are those in which they are the dregs of the dry, in that unless there is an official inquiry to locate responsibility, they are likely to be charged by political opponents with obtaining the permits or persons responsible for the presence of the tell-tale bottles. It is up to the police authority of Washington and not Congress to take a hand in the investigation, in the opinion of Congressman Roberts of Massachusetts. 'I am inclined to believe that Congress is too busy at this time to waste its efforts on a matter which comes under the authority of the police,' he said today. Seen 'Flaw Joke.' Dr. Clarence True Wilson, general secretary of the board of temperance of the Methodist church, is of the opinion that the revelation made by The Times is a "flaw joke on some of these wet Congressmen. The amount was not excessive; for there are two or three Congressmen who look and act and talk and vote as though they take that much daily. 'There is one from Boston and one from Milwaukee that might consistently take that much. If you take notice of the amount they drink you will be able to account for the way they vote, wet inside and out.' Plans 'Flaw Joke.' A few members of the House sought to dispose of the matter by charging it was a "plant," but further revelations today that whiskey and beer bottles had been found scattered promiscuously in and about the fountain in the House Office Building court forced them to a realization of the seriousness of the situation. "There is no doubt about it now, that some one in the building is drinking," Congressman Fess declared, when he learned of the whiskey and beer bottles in the fountain. "I myself observed the bottles in the barrel on the ground floor lavatory Friday," he said. "That was the first time I had noticed the barrel standing in the corner. I thought it strange that such a large barrel should be in the room. I walked over and peered into it, but did not carefully examine the contents of the bottles. The discovery of the bottles in the fountain gives it another important angle. Congressman Randall of California declared that the discovery of the whiskey bottles in the House office building, is one of the reasons why "bone dry" prohibition should be legislated on to the District of Columbia. Plans "Bone Dry" Law. Mr. Randall said today he would shortly bring to the attention of the House Postoffice Committee the recent expose of The Times, when that committee again considers the bill to extend the "bone dry" law to the District.
