SOVIET RULES MUNICH AS RED FLAG IS UNFURLED

FOE MILITARISM TRYING TO RETURN

 lot of you," and to have begun firing prematurely toward the government bench.
 The chief assailant in the Lantag was a Dutchman named Potter, who is now under arrest, it is officially announced at Munich.
 "Wasn't Guaranteed Order."
 Immediately after the shooting the military commandant in Munich announced that he would not guarantee to maintain order, as he did not have enough men at his disposal to oppose the armed Spartacans.
 The outbreak in Budapest, which began Thursday evening, is said to have been led by Bolsheviki. Newspaper offices, the postoffice, and the principal railway stations were occupied. Government troops later drove the rioters from the station. A state of siege was proclaimed. One report said the trades unions were planning a general strike as a demonstration against the Bolsheviki. Hundreds of casualties have resulted from a series of bloody encounters between the police and mobs of unemployed at Budapest.

SCHIEDEMANN PREDICTS REVOLUTION WILL BE CRUSHED IN TWO WEEKS

WEIMAR, Feb. 23.—Chancellor Schieidemann predicted today that the Spartacan uprising will be crushed within two weeks. He admitted that the interim probably will be filled with bloody fighting, but is determined to crush the outbreak at any cost.
 To Military Governor, Noske, who suppressed the Spartacan revolt in Berlin, has been delegated the task of directing the entire campaign against the radicals. He will attempt to associate the various anti-Bolsheviki factions if possible and isolate the Spartacans, who, according to government information, expect help from the Russian Bolsheviki.
 The cabinet is understood to have decided definitely that the situation is primarily a Spartacan uprising, rather than a workmen's strike. This decision is alleged to have been the motive that decided the ministers to use extreme measures against the rioters. Addressing the national assembly, Schieidemann informed the delegates of the government's determination to crush the revolution. His announcement was greeted with hisses and groans by the radical delegates.

 The Spartacan demonstration in Munich has caused additional apprehension, as some of the government officials fear the Bavarians will seize the opportunity to form some sort of an alliance with the Spartacans, in an effort to vent their hate on the Prussians.
 By J. W. T. MASON.
 NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—Assassination as a new weapon of the German army for the restoration of military discipline is the probable explanation of the murder of Premier Eisner, of Bavaria, by an army officer who is also a German noble.
 The death of Eisner follows so closely upon his recent denunciation of German militarism as to make the connection in the highest degree probable. No other governing official in Germany has dared to hold up the rule of the army as the cause of the distress which has fallen upon the German people. The Bavarian premier is the first to have done so, and he has followed the fate of Rosa Luxemburg and Liebknecht, who as rebel leaders denounced militarism and were lynched by soldiers while under arrest.
 The German army spirit is trying desperately to come back. The militarists alone are still sacred within Germany. Eisner, Luxemburg, and Liebknecht are the examples of the nemesis that overtakes whoever tries to belittle the militarists to the German people. It is a new situation which is thus developing in Germany. The hope of the Germans to recover what they have lost during the war rests on keeping active the old ideals of military might. To do this, respect for the army is being maintained, if necessary by an assassin's bullet.
 In Weimar, the week's events have shown a sullen obedience to the new armistice terms of the allies, with whispered threats of revenge if Germany is pressed too hard. There appears to be a relationship between this call for vengeance and the murder of the only statesman in office in Germany who has denounced the army. The ferocity of the German military spirit, which showed evidence of physical exhaustion after the signing of the armistice, is now undergoing a revival. Former indications of a possible change in Germany's worship of the army are not being borne out. It is to the army that the Germans now seem to be turning again, as their sole savior. The disbanding of von Hindenburg's horde will not make Germany harmless, while the people still clutch at the hopes of a military revenge in the future.

SONS OF IRELAND DEMAND FREEDOM

 The goose-step. It was a lieutenant who killed Eisner for the same offense, rather more magnified. The war appears not to have broken the Germans of the Zabern habit. On this account the Rhine still remains civilization's danger line. Precautions for the indefinite future appear to be necessary along its menacing banks.
 WEIMAR, Feb. 22.—(Delayed)—Chancellor Schieidemann, after stating that the assassination of Premier Eisner and Minister Auer left Munich in control of the Spartacans, today declared that relentless warfare would be waged against the radicals.
 The government has been ordered to employ every force at its command to crush terrorism everywhere, the chancellor said. The cabinet feels that the new revolution has actually begun.

MRS. ASA CANDLER, OF ATLANTA, DEAD

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 22.—Mrs. Asa Candler, former wife of Mayor Candler, died suddenly at her home yesterday.
 Mrs. Candler had suffered from arthritic rheumatism for five years, and for the past year had been practically confined to her bed. Expert treatment at Johns Hopkins Hospital, at Baltimore, recently failed to remedy her condition.
 The wreath placed on the shaft to the Arcadians bore a somewhat similar inscription, reading: "To the memory of the Arcadians, a race made famous by Longfellow, who were forced to leave their homes and seek refuge in foreign lands by the common enemy of liberty."
 Crowds Enthusiastic.
 The immense crowd which filled the armory was stirred to repeated outbursts of enthusiasm and applause by the speakers, who included the Rev. Francis X. McCabe, of DePaul University, Illinois; Justice Daniel F. Cohalan, of New York; the Hon. John P. Grace, of Charleston, S. C.; Major Jean Maije, of the French army; Rev. Peter E. McGinnis, of New York; Dr. Patrick McCartan, envoy of the provisional government of the Irish republic; Representative Thomas Gallagher, of Illinois; Bishop Gunn, of Natchez, Miss.; and John Devoy, of New York, editor of the Gaelic America, and Mrs. Ryan Jolly, head of the Nuns of the Battlefield.
 The loudest outburst of the day came when John Devoy recommended that the following cablegram be sent to Edmond de Valera, Arthur Griffith and Count Plunkett, organizers of the new "Irish republic" at Dublin, Ireland.
 "Five thousand delegates to the Irish race convention assembled on the birthday of George Washington where immortal Declaration of Independence was given to the world, representing every section of our country, all shades of religious and political beliefs and many millions of our fellow citizens, congratulate you and through you the people of Ireland upon triumph of real national policy and pledge our best efforts to unify and solidify American opinion behind Ireland's insistent demand for complete national self-determination."
 Gaelic Bagpipers Parade.
 The great crowd stood and cheered and a band composed of Gaelic bagpipers, clad in the ancient picturesque gaelic costume, paraded through the aisles, playing loudly and adding to the uproar.
 The convention went on record as heartily favoring the proposition.
 Another demonstration ensued following the address of Representative Thomas Gallagher of Illinois, when he declared:
 "I am with you heart and soul in this movement for independence against British oppression."
 Representative Gallagher recently introduced a resolution in Congress favoring self-determination for Ireland. He denounced the "propaganda of Anglomania and 'hands across the sea' that Britain has been working."
 Representative Gallagher expressed the hope that Congress, at an early date would "give us a chance to say whether we are to expect the freedom of Ireland or not."
 Major Mayle received an ovation when he asserted: "No lasting peace can be obtained unless Ireland gets her freedom."
 "The ideas of France do not change," he said. "We fought with a will to win the war and to win peace. If the freedom of Ireland is not assured, it means that the war will not be over."

"DEATH TO BOURGEOISIE"

ZURICH, Feb. 23.—Munich mobs are shouting "death to the bourgeoisie," according to a dispatch from the Bavarian capital. The message said that three socialist parties had formed a coalition committee. Demonstrations were described as resembling those of the first days of the revolution.

DRY AGENT SLAYER BELIEVED CAUGHT

Officials of Alexandria County believe they have arrested the negro who shot and killed William E. Payne, Virginia dry agent and terror of bootleggers, in Rosslyn, Friday night. He was taken into custody yesterday afternoon.
 The suspect is confined in the Alexandria county jail. Two other negro men and Katherine Jackson, the negress, who saw the death grapple between Payne and his assailant, are being held in connection with the murder.
 Payne was killed in a battle with a negro prisoner whom he had arrested for bootlegging the other day.
 Frank L. Call, Commonwealth attorney of Alexandria county, and Sheriff Howard Fields personally led armed men and deputies from the latter's office on the man-hunt which began early Friday night.
 Attorney Call told The Times last night the search is still being continued, but other officials said the officers in charge of the man-hunt feel confident the right man has been taken.
 By a coincidence the same kind of clue which first furnished the basis for the search for the "madman of the northwest" aided the officials of Alexandria county as they conducted the search yesterday. It was a hat. The murderer lost it in his mad haste to escape after he had shot down the prohibition officer.
 Funeral Arrangements.
 Funeral arrangements for Payne were completed last night. Services will be held at his former home, at Georgetown and Fairfax roads, near Rosslyn. Interment will take place in the Alexandria Park Cemetery. The Rev. J. Sidney Peters, prohibition commissioner of Virginia, who appointed Payne to enforce the prohibition laws, will assist in conducting the funeral services.
 Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, last night expressed his regret over the slaying of the young Virginia officer.
 "Acts of violence like this, in several sections of the country, are due largely to the encouragement the lawless elements are receiving from those who oppose the enforcement of the prohibition amendment," said Mr. Wheeler.
