Majority of Women Who Took Men's Jobs During War Will Retain Them

The majority of women who filled men's jobs during the war will keep them during peace time, a preliminary investigation by Labor Department officials shows.

In an effort to determine to what extent the women are retaining war jobs, reports were sought from factories in various parts of the country by the women in industry service of the Labor Department.

About one-half of these state that they will retain all their women workers. Eighty-two per cent will keep part of their force of women, leaving only 18 per cent who are planning to discharge all women.

Women Have 'Made Good.' Running through nearly all the reports is the general opinion that women have 'made good' in the places they filled during the war.

Officials still have been unable to obtain any definite figure as to the number of women who took men's places during the war. Reports from Maryland show that out of 25,744 women employed, 13,443 replaced men.

Between 11,000,000 and 12,000,000 women are now working, but officials have not been able to determine the increase due to the war. It has been estimated at about 1,500,000. Nearly 700,000 were placed last year by the United States Employment Service, although many of these are believed to be women who usually work.

$5 to $3,000 Salaries. The women placed by the service receive pay all the way from $5 a week—that of a waitress in a country town—to $3,000 salary of the secretary of an important commission.

Women war workers in allied countries will not fare as well as their American sisters. Labor Department reports indicate. With approximately 1,400,000 women having replaced men in England during the war, the belief of the 'Employers' Industrial Commission, just returned from Europe, is that 'it appears to be generally accepted that the majority of these women will either return to their homes or enter again upon domestic service.'

Large numbers have already been dismissed with a donation of 25 shillings weekly for thirteen weeks. In France large numbers of women in government plants were turned away on thirty days' notice, while many others lost work through the shutting down of private war plants.

AIR OFFICERS HEAR 'VOICE FROM SKY'

A remarkable demonstration of the Magnavox, the instrument by which Lieut. Herbert Metcalf, flying 3,000 feet above the Treasury, read the President's appeal for support of the Victory loan to 20,000 people on the ground, was given Thursday afternoon before officers of the United States air service.

The demonstration was conducted by E. S. Fridham, who, with P. Jensen, invented the instrument. Maj. Gen. Charles T. Menoher, Uncle Sam's air chief, who recently returned from a year's service overseas, and Col. Clarence C. Colver, inventor of the radio-phone, were present.

The aerial end of the experiment was conducted by Lieutenant Metcalf in a Bolling field plane. He went up from Bolling field at 12:30 o'clock and presently his voice, bigger than life, began to come from the Magnavox. He flew up until he was directly over the Treasury, where the instrument was installed.

Hear Every Word Distinctly. 'I will fly over the Ellipse in a large circle and come back to you,' came the voice from the skies. The plane far above swung in a circle and came back to the Treasury.

'As I pass over you I will recite the alphabet so you can hear the sound as I move past.' Then the alphabet came in letter clear and distinct. 'It's not very good weather up here; rather hazy. It's much cooler than I thought it would be. It's getting slightly hazy now. I am over the White House. Now I'll turn west and return to Bolling field. I'm rather high, but it's rough, and I don't think it wise to fly lower. So I'll say good-bye to you and the experiment was completed.'

The Magnavox is essentially an instrument for the amplifying of sound waves, and as such can be used in connection with the telephone, wireless, or the ordinary telephone. By its use the sound waves coming from the instrument, ordinarily very faint, are increased in volume to a great degree, so that they may be heard at a long distance from the instrument. This is accomplished by means of a very flexible diaphragm, which vibrates through a large arc, varying with the amount of current used.

With this instrument President Wilson, sitting at his desk in the White House, could speak to a crowd of 800,000 people in San Francisco. 'At the same time we come next to France in loss of life. Already we have 1,400,000 unemployed, yet Germany has just cut down on our coal supplies from 1,000,000 tons monthly to 250,000 tons. The effect of this is to ruin Italy economically and throw most of the country into idleness at a time when we have no outlet for immigration.'

'Now comes this deathblow from President Wilson, who is certainly unable to appreciate the intensity of our national feeling toward France. This is Italy's reward for thrice saving Europe from German domination. We saved France, England and Russia at the beginning of the war when France stationed three army corps on the Italian frontier. We were then an ally of Germany, but we told France she should wipe out the troops against Germany as we did not intend to attack her.'

Fee's Deathblow. 'Our intervention in 1915 saved Russia, and our final victory on the Pivae was the greatest of the war and Germany's deathblow. Our 1918 offensive on the Pivae cost us 40,000 in killed and 120,000 wounded in the first three days of fighting. 'Now, after all of these unparalleled sacrifices, the President refuses us France, which is 80 per cent Italian.'

Trees for Hero Dead to Be Planted Throughout Country on Arbor Day

Plans for the planting of memorial trees for America's soldier and sailor dead and in honor of those who offered their services are under way in many places throughout the United States, while in numerous instances such planting already has taken place. Following the suggestion of the American Forestry Association to the governors of the States, made shortly after the signing of the armistice last November, great impetus has been given to this movement, and Arbor Day will be celebrated this year in many of the States with a degree of significance and in a more widespread manner than it has ever before enjoyed.

Among the hundreds of reports to the American Forestry Association from many cities and towns throughout the United States that from Minneapolis shows the most elaborate plans yet made to plant memorial trees. That city has secured 1,500 trees to be placed along the parkways, and a fund has been donated by Charles M. Loring, former president of the State Forestry Association, to care permanently for the trees. The American white elm, most popular of all trees for street planting in this country, has been selected for the purpose. These noble memorials will be spaced along the parkways, and a fund has been donated by Charles M. Loring, former president of the State Forestry Association, to care permanently for the trees.

To Furnish Markers. The American Forestry Association has worked out plans for the registration of all memorial trees which are planted, is making provision to furnish markers which will bear the name of the individual for whom the tree is planted, and will present a certificate of registration to the organization or individual who does the planting. This will constitute a permanent record of this tribute by the American people to their sons who served in the great war.

Detroit and a number of towns and villages nearby are setting out trees along the highways in that section. The Detroit Rotary Club which at first was considering making a present to each of its members of a tree to plant in honor of those men, sixteen in number, none of whom, however, were killed.

A number of suggestions made to them by the American Forestry Association, have urged the special importance of Arbor Day this spring, and have issued proclamations calling for planting. Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, in fixing April 25 as a special day for this purpose, declares that 'having fought a victorious foreign war, we are now filled with the spirit of our soldier dead, victims of a great and cruel contest, held in tender memory by the public mind.'

Patriotic Impulse. 'It is a patriotic impulse,' adds Governor Sproul, 'to preserve the names of these heroes who made the supreme sacrifice in a long-lived vigorous tree, capable of outliving the centuries, to bless those who are to come, and to give shade and beauty to our land. For this purpose no short-lived or puny tree should be taken. The lofty spirit of patriotism is not satisfied with any tree but that of the most enduring character.'

Philadelphia, with the largest park in the United States and with miles of trees along its streets, has started an active campaign to plant memorial trees, while New York City, New Orleans, Worcester, Mass.; Cincinnati, Atlanta, Lexington, Ky.; Rochester, N. Y.; Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis, Fort Worth, Tex., and numerous other cities are preparing to honor their heroes in this way. In many cases entire counties or townships are planting trees.

The planting of trees as memorials is linked closely with the building and the improvement of highways, for which purpose there is available during the present fiscal year more than $5,000,000, with $2,150,000 available for this work in 1920.
