

COLLINS TELLS HOW SINN FEIN MOVE STARTED

Reveals Shortly Before Death Intimate Details of Party's Birth.

In this and the next installment of the book written by Michael Collins, the martyred Irish leader, in collaboration with Hayden Talbot, representative of The Washington Times, the story digresses from Collins, personally, to Arthur Griffith, whose death was so soon to be followed by that of Collins.

In publishing these articles The Washington Times cannot be too emphatic in asserting that the book is presented to the American public for its historic interest only, and without prejudice for or against either side of the conflicting Irish elements.

By HAYDEN TALBOT. Copyright, 1922, New York American. CHAPTER 5. SECTION 1.

"Sinn Fein is not my creation. It is unfair to the memory of a great Irishman that this false impression should be allowed to exist. Sinn Fein was conceived by two—and the other man was William Rooney."

Arthur Griffith made this statement to me—so far as I am aware, it was the last statement he ever made for publication—after I had asked him to tell me the story of how he won his countrymen to the Sinn Fein policy.

At that time it was late in June. Rory O'Connor and his men were in possession of the Four Courts Building and every attempt to establish unity between the two sections of Irish had failed.

There was nothing for me to do but comply, obviously. Now, however, that Griffith is gone and that Collins (this was written before his death) definitely has declared his intention of carrying on the war until law and order shall have been established throughout the country, the story can be told.

In all my newspaper career I have never met a man who held facts in such superlatively high esteem.

"The Sinn Fein movement," Griffith explained, "was both economic and national. Rooney's idea and mine was to make Sinn Fein in this way meet two evils produced by disunion. Primarily, Ireland's need was education.

A Force For Unity. "Sinn Fein grew to wield enormous educational power. More than that, we saw the fruits of our labors in the growth of spiritual power among those who came into the ranks of Sinn Fein.

"Everywhere we preached the re-creation of Ireland built upon Gael. We penetrated into Belfast and northeast Ulster, where encouraging educational work was making the national revival a living reality.

Defends Sinn Fein. "Who who went to London as the nation's representatives did not go as the representatives of a united Ireland, as we should have been had our work in Ulster gone on even a short time longer.

Denies Pacifism. "For Irish representatives to sit in Westminster Parliament has been as the representative of the worst thing that could happen to Ireland. But Sinn Fein was not pacifistic.

CONNECTICUT STICKS TO OLD VOTING SYSTEM

Hard Finds Caucus and Convention Idea Well Grounded in Nutmeg State.

By WILLIAM HARD. Copyright, 1922, by Cosmopolitan News Service.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 30.—Here in the land of the caucus and of the convention, where the voice of the direct primary is not yet heard, I notice few indications of any passionate desire for summoning it hither from its haunts in other States.

Connecticut should be the favorite of Secretary of War Woodrow Wilson and Warren Gamaliel Harding. It should be asked by them to put an exhibit of its caucus and convention system into a traveling railway car and send this exhibit through Wisconsin and California and all other ardent direct primary States for purposes of instruction and conversation.

Which side would get converted would remain to be seen; but the important thing is the courage of Mr. Harding and all the other enemies of the direct primary system to not need to appeal to history or to theory in their advocacy of the caucus and convention system.

Having looked, I report that the caucus and convention system of Connecticut is at any rate a large and active mental and physical exercise.

All the registered Republican voters in each town, or in each ward, as the case might be, were notified to assemble themselves by town. In the cities they were held ward by ward.

In a direct primary you simply vote in a caucus you may also converse and confer. It is claimed that thus the citizen may gain a useful personal acquaintance with his political leaders and may learn to know them as people in life.

And I hear it made with equal enthusiasm by Mr. J. Henry Roraback, who is the chief Republican politician of the State, and by Mr. Thomas J. Spellacy, who is the chief Democratic politician of this capital city of the State and who leans toward progressivism.

The Republican conventions of one sort and another in Connecticut will now last till well on toward the end of September.

Stultz took the stand last night and was the only witness put on by the defense. He told the court he was an uneducated man and played for money.

Stultz broke down after the sentence had been pronounced. He will be taken to the Baltimore city jail today by James A. Jones, sheriff of Frederick county.

The shooting, according to the testimony, was the outcome of an attempt to take possession of an automobile at the Stultz home which had been levied on a short time before to satisfy a debt.

Stultz was prosecuted by Mr. Anderson and Thomas Dawson, State's attorney for Montgomery county. He was defended by Sherman P. Bowser, of Frederick, and John A. Garrett, of this county.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 30.—An experiment in a "love bonus" was a failure for Adolph Loose, according to an answer to his wife's divorce petition, filed here.

THREE BEATEN TO DEATH WITH IRON WEAPON

Unidentified Assailant Kills F. Burns, Wife and Boarder, in Ohio Home.

By International News Service.

CANTON, Ohio, Aug. 30.—Three persons—Frank Burns, twenty-seven, his wife, Freda, twenty-six, and Mrs. Mary Nola, twenty-one—were brutally murdered early this morning in the Burns' home here.

They were beaten to death with an iron bar in the hands of an unknown assailant.

Mrs. Nola, who had been separated from her husband, Joseph Nola, had been living with the Burns family.

About 2 o'clock this morning she arrived home with a companion, Luther Armstrong. As she entered the door she was struck down. The assailant then struck Armstrong a glancing blow, cutting open his cheek.

It is argued that those 4,000 men get a personal, practical political acquaintance an education which is highly valuable to the State.

I observe on the other hand that during these present caucuses in Connecticut there is for the most part a singular absence of the intense general public discussion of public State and national issues which is always prevalent in such States as Wisconsin and California during a direct primary campaign.

The issues here seem to be left very largely to the delegates. The idea seems to be that the neighbors should choose some fellow neighbor in whom they have personal confidence and send them forth to find out what the issues are and settle them.

Choosing between these two merits, Connecticut still sticks firmly to the former and seems likely at this moment to live and die with its leading citizens still deciding its fate by putting their heads close together in lobbies.

Chews Man's Finger To Steal Diamond Ring

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 30. One of three bandits who held up and robbed Harry Schinder of jewelry worth $2,000 chewed the flesh from his little finger when a diamond ring failed to slide off quickly.

Exhibiting a bandaged left hand in proof of this statement, Schinder, a clothing manufacturer, gave testimony today before Magistrate Coward that resulted in Robert Crosset, twenty-nine, a taxicab driver, being held in $5,000 bail for court, charged with complicity in a highway robbery. Crosset was arrested last night.

Schinder testified Crosset drove him in a taxicab early Sunday to a point near his home and that after he had left the taxicab three men drew revolvers and told him to be quiet.

One of the robbers, Schinder said, chewed the flesh from his little finger in his haste to get off a diamond ring. One of the robbers, he said, drove off in the machine said to have been driven by Crosset and the other two in a machine parked nearby. None of the highwaymen have been captured.

In reply it is urged that discussions in conventions teach you more in an hour than you can learn in a year from discussions carried on in newspapers and in lecture halls where you do not become personally acquainted with the candidates.

Choosing between these two merits, Connecticut still sticks firmly to the former and seems likely at this moment to live and die with its leading citizens still deciding its fate by putting their heads close together in lobbies.
