A wen that Cost $150,000 to Remove.

Young Stevens has gold galore, but what are millions to a man so deformed that dogs bark at him when he goes halting by, and lovely woman, even when the golden luster of untold wealth glitters about his head, fain at sight of him? From his birth a peculiar vein, growing larger day by day, has made his face and neck hideous. Covered with long hair it looked like a repulsive wild animal clinging to his head. Stevens hid himself from the general eye and moped in loneliness. In early youth he was betrothed to a beautiful young girl, but as the wen grew great his love grew less, rather his determination never to inflict his horrible deformity on a fellow-creature was firmly formed. The best surgeons of Europe and America gave him no hope. They were unanimous in declaring that to remove the wen was to permanently remove the patient. But recently he met a daring practitioner who declared that it was within the skill of the surgeon to lop off the excrescence and restore the afflicted man to a healthy and normal condition. Stevens listened gratefully. "Do it," said he, "and your reward shall be $150,000." With electric knives the confident cutter went to work, and in a very brief time had earned his manhood. The skin beneath the tumor was smooth and sound, and Stevens is in excellent health. He may now have his picture taken, enjoy his wealth, and say to his Dolcinea, "Wen, oh! wen shall he wed?"

Clinching A Bargain.

The tecton is laid in San Francisco. The merchant is calmly waiting for customers to drop in, when there appeared in the street a long column of Ah Sins and Chang Loos. Arriving in front of the store, slowly and with measured tread, they ranged them along the side of the apartment, when the following conversation ensued:
—Chang Loos:—"Have you got any cotton twine?"
Merchant:—"Yes."
"How much charge?"
"A dollar a pound."
"I give you fifty cent."
"Oh! out."
And without another word being said on either side they departed as they had come. In about an hour the same performance was exactly enacted.
"Have you got any cotton twine?"
"Yes."
"How much charge?"
"A dollar a pound."
"I give you seven-cent-five cent."
"Oh! out!"

And with charming decorum they immediately got. Now the merchant was used to this sort of thing. The evil was one of long standing, but the remedy was simple and easily applied. Sending out to a neighboring butcher shop for the loan of a cleaver he serenely awaited the appearance of that happy band, for he knew they would come; oh, yes, they would certainly come in plenty. Sure enough, he was not disappointed. But a little while and all unconsciously that they had been in that store before, or had ever in the course of their natural lives set eyes on that merchant, Chang Loos, with a winning smile, interrogated:
"Have you got any twine?"
"Yes." (With wrath.)
"How much charge?"
"A dollar a pound."
"I take fifty pound," and the trade was consummated.

Bowler's Hoof Liniment.
After 30 years practical experience with horses, a staining, teaming, &c. I have learned that more horses have been crippled by inattention to the feet than all other diseases combined. After many experiments I have found the true remedy to prevent the disease of the hoof, or restore it after negligence, to what nature intended it should be. The great support of the noble animal. If the hoof is inflamed and diseased, the animal is comparatively worthless. This liniment will surely prevent this worst of all diseases (Contraction, Corns, Quarter Cracks, Contraction of the Back Sinew, generally called Knee-Springs, &c.) and restore those that have been crippled by the want of such a remedy. Try it, and it will never fail if properly applied. Bathe the horse's foot once a week, or often if necessary, at the heel and frog, and work the hoof close to the hair.
M. C. BOYER, Norristown, Pa.
Mr. M. C. Boyer—Dear Sir: This is to certify that I have used your Liniment in my stable for three months past, on more than one hundred horses, and in the best preparation I have ever used on horses. It is far better than you recommend. Send me five cases at once, by express, C. O. D.
