GRANT AND THE PRESIDENT.
Though the argument between Gen. Grant and the President has ended, neither has accepted the position of the other. The President has refused to accept the advice of such men as Black, has flatly told Grant that whatever may have been the intention of Congress, it is not ready to give Grant any power to instruct district commanders, or to disapprove any of the recent orders, except such as relate to removals. A close and careful analysis of the law at headquarters has convinced General Grant that the President is right on the strict construction of the law.

The President told Grant that under the Reconstruction law the latter had no right to issue paragraph five of the order to General Thomas, and Grant replied that the paragraph in question was not a removal, but a close and careful analysis of the law at headquarters has convinced General Grant that the President is right on the strict construction of the law.
